"SEC. 11. Pertained to the composition of the judicial district, and enacted that the county of Monroe should be annexed to and compose a part of the eleventh district, and that the courts should be held on the third Mondays in February, May, September and December, . . . the first court to be held on the third Monday of December following the passage of the act.

"SEC. 12. Related to certioraris and appeals, and provided for the trial of causes already begun, or which should be commenced prior to the third Monday of October, in the courts of Northampton and Pike.

"SECS. 13 and 14. Related respectively to the returns of elections and to the imprisonment of criminals in the jail of Northampton County until such time as a prison should be constructed in Monroe County, and Sections 15 and 16 consisted of further specifications in regard to jail fees and the removal of prisoners to Monroe County."

The territory of Monroe County was only reduced seven years after its erection by the setting off of Carbon County. The great township of Tobyhanna, carved from the vastly greater one of old Towamensing, formed a part of Monroe County upon its organization, and in 1842 that portion of its territory lying between the Lehigh River and Tobyhanna Creek was set apart as a township and called Penn Forest. This latter township was all that Monroe lost by the erection of Carbon. The act by which Carbon was brought into existence provided the following boundary lines:

"Beginning at the northwest corner of Northampton County; thence southwardly along the said county line till it intersects the northern line of Lehigh County; thence eastwardly along the top of the Blue Mountain to the southwest corner of Monroe County; thence northwardly along the Monroe County line, and continue the same point of compass in a direct line through Tobyhanna township, in Monroe County, to such point as may strike the Luzerne County line; thence westwardly along the Luzerne County line to the place of beginning. . . . Provided, That the territory taken from Monroe County shall only embrace the township of Penn Forest, and that the said township of Penn Forest shall constitute the whole of the territory taken from Monroe County by the provisions of this act.[1]

It may not be commonly known that active measures for the formation of a new county were resorted to in that part of Northampton which is now comprised in Carbon County and the country contiguous during the early part of the present century. Indeed, one abortive attempt, more far-reaching in scope and of still earlier date, has been chronicled in these pages. Lehighton (on the Lehigh, within the present limits of Carbon County) was ambitious of becoming the seat of justice of a new county as early as 1816. From time to time, before Monroe was formed, various movements were made, tending toward the erection of a county centering on the Upper Lehigh, any one of which, had it been successful, would either have long delayed the establishment of Monroe or materially affected its territorial limits when it was formed. There was a general disposition on the part of the residents in the region now forming the western part of Monroe to favor those projects of county erection which contemplated the location of a seat of justice on or near the Lehigh. As a matter of interest to the reader who is curious on this subject, we give one of the early petitions (with the names of signers) which was designed to include some of the territory which ultimately was embraced in Monroe. How much earlier than 1836 this project was entered upon is not known, but it was probably many years.

[1] The framer of the act appears at first to have been in doubt as to whether Penn Forest was in existence, for he states that the line was to run "through Tobyhanna township," but at the close of the clause he recognizes the existence of Penn Forest, and makes a redundant provision as to that township constituting the whole of the territory to be taken from Monroe.

Following is the petition referred to:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

"The Petition of the Subscribers, Inhabitants of Toamensin and the western part of Chestnut Hill and Ross Townships, in Northampton County, north of the Blue Mountain, respectfully represents,—

"That the great distance of this portion of the County from the seat of justice at Easton occasions much expense and great inconvenience to your Petitioners, and this expense and inconvenience is becoming more expensive with the increase of Population, business, and improvements north of the blue mountain.

"These disadvantages have heretofore been represented to your Hon. body and a division of the county so as to remove them has been petitioned for. Your petitioners now trust that these repeated prayers will induce your Hon. body to enact a Law that shall divide this county in such manner as to give to your petitioners the reasonable accommodation of a Seat of Justice north of the mountain. And your Petitioners beg leave most respectfully to propose that the line of such division should begin at the corner of Schuylkill and Northampton County on the top of the Blue Mountain; thence along the dividing line of said Counties to where it strikes the Northampton County line; thence along the said line to where it joins the Luzerne County line; thence along the last-named line to where it strikes the Lehi; thence up the Lehi to the mouth of Tobyhanna; thence to Muddy Run so as to take in the saw-mill erected thereon; thence (on a line that shall include the western half of Chestnut Hill and Ross townships) to where the road through Smith's Gap in the Blue Mountain strikes the line of Moore township; thence along the summit of the Blue Mountain to the place of beginning. And your petitioners further pray that the seat of justice for the proposed new County be established at Lehiton, the place where the elections for East Penn township are held, which place is for various reasons the most convenient and suitable," and where the County buildings will be erected on the public square in said Town by the voluntary contribution.

"And your Petitioners will ever pray.

Before the election to determine the location of the seat of justice was held, Daniel Stroud, Stogdell Stokes and other citizens of Stroudsburg, desiring that it should be fixed there, entered into bonds agreeing to erect the necessary public buildings in case the land offered by S. J. Hollinshead should be chosen as the site, without any cost to the county. The bonds were printed, making a sheet about the size of one page of an average newspaper, and in that form were used for electioneering purposes. The document began thus:

"Know all men by these presents, That we, Daniel Stroud, Stogdell Stokes, Joseph Wilson, John Boys, Morris D. Robeson and Michael H. Dreher, of the borough of Stroudsburg, are held and firmly bound unto Moses W. Coolbaugh, Benjamin V. Bush, William Van Buskirk, Michael Shoemaker and Joseph Trach, trustees appointed by an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed the first day of April last, and unto the county commissioners, who shall be elected next October, and afterwards, for the county of Monroe, erected by said act, in the just and full sum of ten thousand dollars, lawful money of the United States, to which payment, well and truly to be made, we, and each of us, do jointly and severally bind ourselves and each of our heirs, executors and administrators, for and in the whole, unto the said trustees and county commissioners, their certain attorney, successors or assigns. Sealed with our seal, dated the fourth day of July, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.

"Whereas, by the aforesaid act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed the first day of April last, . . . the above named, Moses W. Coolbaugh, Benjamin V. Bush, William Van Buskirk, Michael Shoemaker and Joseph Trach were appointed trustees to receive proposals and subscriptions and donations for building a court-house, jail and public offices in and for the said county of Monroe, and, whereas, the site whereon to erect those buildings is by the act aforesaid directed to be ascertained and fixed by election in this month (July) inst., and, whereas, it is desired by the said Daniel Stroud, Stogdell Stokes, Joseph V. Wilson, John Boys, Morris D. Robeson and Michael H. Dreher, that the site fixed upon may be in the borough of Stroudsburg aforesaid, and accordingly, the above bounden . . . in case the site should be fixed upon by election this month, on the land of S. J. Hollinshead, in Stroudsburg aforesaid, propose, offer, engage, covenant and contract to build, erect, set up and finish in a good and substantial manner, at their own proper expense, free and clear of any expense whatever to the said trustees or to the commissioners that shall be elected next October and their successors, or to the county of Monroe aforesaid, or to the citizens thereof, on such site in the said borough, one large house, fifty by thirty-three feet on the ground, three stories high, either the whole of stone, or the basement story of stone, and the other two of good brick, etc."

This was to be the court-house of Monroe County. The lower story was to have at the west end two rooms, about fifteen feet square, for public offices and to be made fire-proof; one corner at the east to be a kitchen and the other a "Debtors' Jail," with a stone jail-yard adjoining, surrounded by a wall fifteen feet high; the middle of this story was to have a "jailer's parlor" and two rooms surrounded by stone wall for criminal apartments.

The middle story was to be finished for a court-room, and the upper story to be divided into three convenient jury-rooms.

There were various other specifications in the bond, in regard to a cupola and bell, a well, etc., "the whole to be finished in a substantial and durable manner without any needless work or useless ornament."

Stroud and his associates in their proposition left it to the option of the commissioners whether the court-house and public offices should be in one building, with the jail and jailer's house, in another building, or whether the latter should be separate from the court-house and public offices. In case the latter should be thought the preferable plan, they agreed to build one large building, fifty by thirty feet on the ground, and two stories high, to be used for the court-house, jury-rooms, etc., and another to serve as a jail and jailer's residence, to be twenty-six by thirty-five feet, two stories in height, with a garret.

The bond was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of Luke Brodhead and Jacob Bisbing, on July 4, 1836.

A supplementary provision related to the supervision of the commissioners over methods and materials in buildings and arbitration in case of disagreement concerning their fitness.

The bond of the builders was accompanied by a tender of land to serve as a site for the proposed buildings, from Mr. Hollinshead, of which the following is the substance:

"I, Stroud J. Hollinshead, propose to the trustees . . . that I will at any time, when, hereafter, I may be requested to do so, convey by a good deed, clear of all incumbrances, a certain lot of land in the borough of Stroudsburg, beginning at the northwest corner of William Dean's lot; thence extending nearly westward, precisely the course and parallel with the main street, called Elizabeth Street, one hundred and sixty-five feet; thence nearly southward, to square off precisely from the last mentioned line, one hundred and thirty-three feet, and thence nearly eastward, one hundred and sixty-five feet to William Dean's lot, and thence by said lot nearly northward, one hundred and thirty-three feet to the place of beginning; for the purpose of having erected on said lot, a court-house, jail and public offices for the county of Monroe. And I covenant and contract furthermore to open a public street through my ground to commence at Elizabeth Street aforesaid, of the width of fifty feet, between my Tavern-House and stables, and to extend at that width nearly northwardly to the south side of the above described lot. And I bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators and every of them, unto the trustees . . . and commissioners for the time being, who may be duly elected for Monroe County, on the penalty or sum of ten thousand dollars, to make a good and lawful title, clear of all incumbrances, unto the said commissioners, at any time when requested to do so, for the purpose aforesaid, to be and remain the property of the county of Monroe and the citizens thereof, forever, after the first day of November next, without charge. In witness whereof I hereunto have set my hand and seal, the eighth day of June, A.D. eighteen hundred and thirty-six.

(Signed) "STROUD J. HOLLINSHEAD.

"Sealed and delivered in presence of

"WILLIAM DEAN.
"S. STOKES."

COUNTY-SEAT CONTEST.—A curious and interesting contest for the location of the county-seat occurred after the erection of Monroe. There were three localities in nomination for the seat of justice,—Stroudsburg, Dutotsburg (also known as Monroe Square, and now universally called the Delaware Water Gap) and Kellersville, the last-named being strongly championed by the people of the western portion of the county, while the chief strength of the Smithfields, Stroud and the southern and eastern townships naturally went to Stroudsburg and the Water Gap. Two elections were held, the first resulting in no choice, and both being unquestionably grossly fraudulent. In fact, the second election was contested in the courts, the particular issue being the alleged dishonesty of the Middle Smithfield election board, for which its members were arrested.

In the issue of the Northampton Whig, July 20, 1836, the following item appeared:

"The good people of the County of Monroe seem to be halting between two opinions. They had an election for the seat of justice on the second instant, but there was no majority of the whole number of votes for either of the places. Stroudsburg had but eight hundred votes, Kellersville about seven hundred and fifty and Monroe Square (Dutotsburg) about eighty votes. A new election will take place on Tuesday next, the 26th instant, at which we learn the contest will be confined to Stroudsburg and Kellersville. The parties have buckled on their armor in earnest, and every honorable means, at least, will be resorted to by each, to insure success. In each place they have obligated themselves to erect the court-house, jail and public offices, those necessary appliances for the due conducting of the public affairs of the county, and the punishment of any rogue wherewith our future neighbors may be troubled."

In its issue of August 3d the Whig gave the following concerning the second election:

"We give below the result of the election for the site of the public buildings in Monroe County. A warm contest, from what we learn, was had, and it rumor be correct, not a little gouging took place. The following is said to be the return made by the judges of the election.

The fraud in this election is manifest when it is taken into consideration that the total vote in 1836 was two thousand one hundred and ninety-four, and at the close of the exciting canvas of 1840, when a full vote was certainly polled, the total was only seventeen hundred and ninety-two. Boys of fourteen years voted in the county-seat election, and it is probable that many names were entered upon the lists which were either fictitious or copied from tomb-stones mossy with age.

It is a matter of tradition that the Middle Smithfield election board had three sets of returns of varying dimensions, and that when the roll of the townships was called, they kept an account of the total vote, and then reported that list which was sufficient to overcome the vote for Kellersville, without being excessively large. One return, it is said, was large enough to overcome any vote that could possibly be reported from the other townships.

Following is the vote in the Presidential election of 1840, by townships:

	Harrison.	Van Buren.
Stroud	131	160
Hamilton	45	222
Lower Smithfield	42	183
Middle Smithfield	2	208

John Place and Samuel Gunsaules, who constituted the Middle Smithfield board heretofore alluded to, were indicted for fraud in the election and appeared for trial in the courts of Pike County (those in Monroe not then having been organized). The only item which appeared in the court record concerning this celebrated case was the following (at the January Session of 1837):

"Commonwealth vs. John Place and Samuel Gunsaules.—Indictment for fraud and malpractice in the management and conducting of an election. January 26, 1837: True bill. Same day continued. The defendants were each held in $300 for appearance at August Sessions next. August 31, 1837: Upon exceptions filed and on motion, after argument, the indictment was quashed."

The trial, however, is authentically reported as one of the most remarkable which ever occurred in the remarkable old-time courts of Pike County. It was conducted before Judge Scott and Associates Dingman and Coolbaugh. George W. Woodward and M. M. Dimmick, Esqs., appearing for the prosecution, and Mr. Brooks, of Easton, for the defence.

Judge Scott quashed one or two counts in the indictment, and then, for some reason, left the bench; whereupon Associate Judge Dingman assumed control of the case.

"The president judge," said he, "has seen fit to quash several counts in this indictment on grounds of common law. Now 'Bub'" (alluding to Judge Coolbaugh) "and I know little of law, but I know all about the Legislature, for I have been a member of that, and"—laying his hand impressively on a copy of pamphlet laws—"Bub and I will quash the other indictments on grounds of the Legislature."

And they did. Considerable acerbity and asperity arose from the case, but it finally died away and the unpleasantness is now only recalled in facetious speech and with smiles and laughter.

CHAPTER II.

THE BENCH AND BAR—THE OLD AND NEW BAR.—BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.[1]

MONROE COUNTY was erected out of parts of Northampton and Pike Counties by an act of the Legislature approved April 1st, A. D. 1836.[2]

The act provided for the transfer of all suits pending and undetermined in the several courts of Northampton County and Pike County, on the 1st day of September then next, where both parties to such suit were resident in the county of Monroe.

Section II. of said act provided that the county of Monroe should be annexed to, and compose part of, the Eleventh Judicial District of the Commonwealth, and that the courts in said county should be held on the third Mondays of February, May, September and December in each year, the first court to be held on the third Monday of December then next.

In pursuance of this act, the first court ever held in Monroe County was convened on the 19th day of December, A. D. 1836, at Stroudsburg.

We give the following extract from the court minutes of this session:

"December 19, 1836. This being the day appointed by law for holding the first court within the county of Monroe, there attended at the court-house in Stroudsburg, the Honorable David Scott, president of the Eleventh Judicial District of Pennsylvania; Jacob Brown and John T. Bell, associate judges of the same Court. The several courts were duly opened by John W. Burnett, the cryer appointed by the court.

"The commissions of the following officers were read: Jacob Brown, associate judge; John T. Bell, associate judge; Joseph S. Teel as sheriff of said county, with writ of assistance; Gideon Burrett as prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, clerk of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, and clerk of Court of Quarter Sessions; Samuel Snyder as register and recorder and clerk of the Orphans' Court.

"On motion of James M. Porter, Esq., James M. Porter, Peter Ihrie, Hopewell Hepburn, Andrew H. Reeder, Horace E. Wolf, Richard Brodhead, Jr., Newton D. Strong, William Davis and Peter Wyckoff, Esquires, were duly sworn and affirmed as attorneys of the several courts of this county. On motion of Richard Brodhead, Jr., Esq., M. M. Dimmick, was admitted and sworn as attorney of the several courts of this county.

"On motion Alexander E. Brown was admitted and sworn as attorney of the several courts of this county. It is ordered by the court that the prothonotary, within ten days after the end of this term, place upon a list all causes at issue in this court, for trial at the next term, and that such list, kept in his office for the inspection of all concerned, without fee or reward, shall be deemed sufficient notice of trial to the parties in interest."

The list of admissions above given contains, as the reader will observe, many names afterwards illustrious in law, politics and official station. For many years after the organization of the county the humble little court-house at Stroudsburg, was regularly graced each term of court by some of the best talent of the Eastern bar, and many were the forensic encounters between the Northampton Titans, to which the local populace listened with open-mouthed wonder and admiration.

Gradually, however, with the lapse of years, these legal luminaries, one by one, disappeared from the horizon. New names appeared upon the roll of practicing attorneys of the county and new faces and forms supplanted the old in the arena, but the old portion of the people still delight in recounting the exploits of a race of great lawyers who have passed away; and they never tire of rehearsing the pungent sayings of the old time bench and bar.

For the first few terms of court the calender of the new county was not very heavy. The act requiring the transfer of all suits pending and undetermined in the several courts of Northampton and Pike Counties, September 1, 1836, where both parties to such suit were resident in the county of Monroe, was complied with, and resulted in the entry upon the court records of the county of one suit for

The case was afterwards settled. The records of November Term, 1834, show one case. For April Term, 1835, business was brisk, the records showing four cases, two of them being actions of scire facias on Orphans' Court recognizances, brought by heirs of Conrad Kresge, deceased.

ANECDOTES OF MONROE COUNTY BENCH AND BAR.—In the early settlement of the country, when men lived in isolated communities, with little intercourse with each other, and still less with the world at large, a stronger individuality of character was developed than in the present age of steam and electricity, when the world's news is spread upon the breakfast tables of remotest hamlets, and when men, by their constant and widely-extended intercourse become so fused together that in mental characteristics, habits, mode of life and thought, dress, and even form and physiognomy, one may be said to be more or less a sample of the lot.

Monroe County, in its early history, was no exception to this universal rule, but abounded in odd and grotesque characters, concerning whom many amusing stories are still remembered by the older portion of the inhabitants.

One of these has long gone the rounds and furnished entertainment for many a reminiscent group; but as a specimen of genuine Quaker wit, as well as of terse and vigorous argumentation, it is well deserving of being preserved in more durable form.

He drove his own cow.—Evan Foulke, a Quaker, lived over in Cherry Valley, a few miles from Stroudsburg. He was by trade a shoemaker, and one of his eccentricities was that he always wore his leather apron, even when he came to town. He also owned a small farm and had a number of cows. William Drake was a somewhat litigious character living in Stroudsburg. One day Drake, concluding that the possession of a cow was essential to his domestic happiness, took his brother-in-law, William, otherwise known as Captain Hallet (who, by the way, was another odd character in his day), and proceeded over to Foulke's to buy a cow. Arrived there, after some haggling a cow was selected, the price agreed upon at twenty dollars, the money paid and Drake and Hallet drove the cow to Stroudsburg. The next day, however, Drake, for some reason or other, became dissatisfied with his purchase, and so, again accompanied by Hallet, he drove the cow back to Foulke's and demanded his money. If his object was to lay ground for a lawsuit, he appeared doomed to disappointment, for the meek old Quaker received back the cow and paid back the money without a murmur, and Drake and Hallet again returned home.

After pondering over the situation for some days, Drake wrought himself up to the conviction that he was not yet square with Foulke, but that he ought to have compensation from the latter for his trouble in driving the cow home and back again.

So, bound to have a lawsuit anyway, Drake posts off to a neighboring justice of the peace, Peter Hollinshead, Esq., and has a summons issued against Foulke.

On the return day the parties appeared in propria persona, and managed their own cause. As parties could not then be witnesses, the only evidence was that of Hallet, who was called by the plaintiff. As Hallet came to the stand a discussion arose as to whether it was best to affirm him (Hallet being also of Quaker descent). It was finally concluded that if he couldn't be believed without affirmation, he couldn't with it, and so an affirmation was useless. So Hallet went on and told his story about the purchase of the cow, etc., substantially as above, but, as Foulke thought, with a few unwarranted embellishments. Having concluded, Hallet exclaimed: "There! I could not have said anything more if I had been under oath."

"Indeed! friend William," retorted Foulke, "I should have been very sorry if thee had said near as much." The squire then asked Foulke if he had any evidence; and being informed that he had not, asked him what he had to say in his own behalf.

"Well, Peter," says Foulke to the justice, "what little I have to say, I will say to William,"—referring to William Drake, the plaintiff. Then, turning to Drake, he proceeded: "William, when thee came to my house, the cow was mine and the money was thine?"

"Yes," says Drake, "That's so."

"Well, then thee gave me the money and I gave thee the cow, and then the cow was thine and the money mine."

"Well!" says Drake, assenting.

"Then thee drove the cow home, kept her over-night, and the next day thee drove her back to my house again. Thee gave me back the cow and I gave thee back the money, and then the cow was mine and the money thine."

"Well!" says Drake again, scratching his head and mentally casting about for a loop-hole in the argument.

"Well, then, friend William," concluded the Quaker, as he drove the nail home and clinched it. "Don't thee see thee has been driving thy own cow all the time!"

The following story, although not strictly pertaining to either the bench or bar, relates to an institution that may be said, with all due respect, to be an accessory of both,—i. e., the jail. It illustrates the fact that in the early days of the county our prisoners had oftentimes small occasion to complain of a too rigid administration of penitentiary discipline.

He wouldn't let them in.—Ed. Scott was the keeper of the jail, and had, as tolerably regular boarders, two petty offenders, who were nearly always in his custody for one trivial offense or another. From long association together the jail-keeper and his two prisoners became fast friends and cronies, and occasionally lost sight of the real relation existing between them, which fact oftentimes led to rather ludicrous incidents. The trio were great euchre-players, and usually whiled away the winter evenings by indulgence in their favorite game, which, be it confessed, was not always played within the walls of the jail; for occasionally this model jailer took his prisoners out for an evening's social enjoyment with some of their cronies about the village, and occasionally, too, when it was not convenient for the jailer to go along (was there ever a more obliging official?), he suffered his prisoners to go out and seek recreation by themselves.

One very cold night in January, Scott not feeling well, declined to accompany his—guests, we will call them, and the two latter went out to have a game of euchre with a friend, and soon after, Scott, forgetting their absence, fastened up the jail and went to bed. Some time after midnight he was aroused by a tremendous knocking at the door, and with visions of a new arrival of prisoners and of consequent fees dancing in his mind, Scott hastened down-stairs in scant habiliment, expecting to meet some constable with his charge. What was his disappointment and disgust, on opening the door, at being confronted by the well-known figures of his regular boarders, the par nobile fratum, who were humbly seeking shelter under his hospitable roof. Giving his prisoners a spiteful fling into the hall and slamming the door behind them, this worthy custodian of evil-doers thus delivered himself:

"I'll tell you what, boys, if you don't get in in better season than this the next time, I'll stay abed and you won't get in at all."

He had a good right there.—Analogous to the foregoing is a story told at the expense of Captain Halleck, who succeeded Scott as keeper of the jail.

A little Dutchman by the name of Price—not much of a Dutch name, by the way—got on a spree one day, entered a house over on Fox Hill and stole the owner's title deeds, for what purpose it is hard to imagine, unless it was the drunken notion that by stealing the man's deeds he was stealing his house and lot. However that may be, the culprit was arrested and committed to jail, and in due form of law was presented at the door of the captain's castle as a candidate for admission therein. Soon after his admission to the jail Price became very boisterous and unruly and the captain undertook to administer discipline. The two men grappled each other, and after a brief struggle the captain succeeded in throwing his antagonist upon the floor. Having received some contusions in the scrimmage, the captain did not feel particularly amiable, and he ejaculated, as he held his prisoner down with one hand and wiped the blood from his nose with the other: "You blamed rascal! if you don't behave yourself I'll throw you out o' here!" To which Price rejoined, between his drunken hiccups, and panting for breath: "Hic—hic—I'll let you know—hic—I've got as much right here as—as you have!"

THE DOCTRINE OF "CY PRES."—The following good story, embodying a new application of the legal doctrine of cy pres, is told by that veteran of the bar, Wm. Davis, Esq., and is inserted with his permission:

At an arbitration at Knecht's Hotel, many years ago, Mr. Davis, representing one side of the case, had the misfortune to have a client somewhat given to over-indulgence when liquids were handy, and found considerable difficulty in getting intelligent answers from his client whenever, during the progress of the trial, he sought information from him.

At length the opposing counsel called to the stand a tall, slab-sided specimen of humanity, whose appearance seemed to produce an inexplicable effect upon Davis' client, who was now entirely too far gone to make himself intelligible. He, however, became very much excited, and, in his incoherent way, sought to convey the idea that there was something wrong somewhere. All that Davis could make out of his whispered ejaculations, however, was, "I—I—won't—have him! I don't want him!" "Why?" queried Davis. "What is the matter with him?" "I—I (hic)—I tell you—I don't want um!" was the only response. "Oh, shut up!" said the lawyer, finally losing patience; and, concluding that the trouble was with his bibulous client rather than with the witness, he allowed the latter to be sworn. The witness proceeded to tell a story which, if true, effectually settled the case against Davis' client.

Before commencing the cross-examination Davis called his client out and again asked him what he wanted to tell him. "There!" said the fellow, as he got out of doors, "there! didn't I tell—tell—tell (hic)—tell yer. Didn't I tell yer he didn't know anything?" "Don't know anything!" exclaimed the irate lawyer. "He seems to know entirely too much for you." "Yes, but—but I (hic) didn't want um, yer see," and backing up a tree-box, the litigant braced himself for a final effort. "He don't know what an oath is!" "The —— he don't! Why didn't you say so?" ejaculated the now thoroughly exasperated lawyer as he rushed back to the court-room. "See here, Jack," addressing the witness, "do you know the nature of an oath?"

The witness stood mute. The question was repeated with all the impressive solemnity that no man could employ with greater effect than Mr. Davis. Another long silence. "Oh, put your question so he can understand it," interrupted the opposite counsel. "Well, I'll oblige the gentleman," pursued Davis. "Do you know," addressing the witness, "what you have to do when you are sworn as a witness?" Another long silence, and then the witness, on further pressure, said, in a hesitating manner, "Have—ter—tell—the—truth,—providing I—know it."

"Ah, providing you know it! And what if you don't know it?"

"Then I—have ter—come as near it as I can," drawled the witness. The answer exploded the court, and, under the fulminations of counsel who knew so well how to ring the changes upon it, it effectually exploded the testimony of this witness.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

The first president judge to hold court in Monroe County was Hon. David Scott, who was in commission at the time of the erection of the county. He was succeeded by Judge William H. Jessupp, Nathaniel P. Eldred, Thomas A. Bell, James H. Porter, George R. Barrett, and the present incumbent, S. S. Dreher. It is to be regretted that in some instances information applied for at the proper source, which would have enabled the writer to give a brief biographical sketch of some of these eminent gentlemen, has not been given, and consequently the public is deprived of the interest and advantage accruing from a perusal of such personal history. In other instances all desired data has been freely and cheerfully furnished. This is particularly true of the bench and bar as it at present exists.

The Old Bar and the New.

Hon. M. M. Dimmick.—Milo Melancthon Dimmick, son of Daniel Dimmick, who married Jane, daughter of Dr. J. J. Aerts, was born at Milford, Pike County, Pa., October 30, 1812. He received a good education, and was admitted to the bar of his native county when about twenty-three years of age, his certificate being signed by Amzi Fuller, Judge Eldred and Hon. George W. Woodward. About the year 1841 the subject of this sketch removed to Stroudsburg, the county-seat of Monroe County, where he resided and practiced law very successfully for many years. During his residence here he was twice elected to Congress—once in 1848 and again in 1850. In the year 1854 he removed to Mauch Chunk, where he continued to reside until his death, November 22, 1872, actively engaged in the practice of his profession. He was at one time a candidate for the president judgeship of the district, but was defeated, after a hot contest, by Hon. James M. Porter, of Easton. In the spring of 1871 he was named as a delegate-at large to the Constitutional Convention, and came within one vote of being nominated. He was tendered the county nomination, but his name was withdrawn on account of his ill health. At the time of his death he was a director of the First National Bank of Mauch Chunk; president of the Cemetery Association, a vestryman of St. Mark's Parish and also of the Church of the Good Shepherd, at Milford.

As a lawyer it was, perhaps, at Stroudsburg, where the prime of his life was passed, that Mr. Dimmick earned his best title to distinction. He was noted for tireless industry, thorough and systematic reading, and unsparing energy in the success of his clients. And over all—over the jar of the forensic encounter, as over the sweet amenities of social life; over the turmoil of political contests, as over the quiet and unpretentious discharge of his churchly duties, and the exercise of private beneficence—he threw the mantle of a noble and large-hearted charity, which endeared him to all. He was peculiarly a gentleman of the old school, a man, sans peur et sans reproche—an ideal lawyer, citizen and Christian gentleman combined. Mr. Dimmick was married, February 18, 1840, to Mary Alice, daughter of Hon. John Cooper, of Danville, Pa., and granddaughter of Hon. Thomas Cooper, at one time president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, and subsequently president of the University of South Carolina. She died at Mauch Chunk December 22, 1875. They had three children,—Elizabeth Mott, (intermarried with Rev. Hurley Baldy), John C. and Milton, all of whom are now deceased.

Hon. Samuel S. Dreher.—A conspicuous figure in the local history of this part of the State is the gentleman whose honored name heads this sketch.

Samuel S. Dreher was born at Stroudsburg, Pa., April 10, 1824, and was the eldest of nine children of Hon. Michael H. Dreher and Elizabeth, his wife, whose maiden-name was Smith, a daughter of Adam Smith, of Smithfield township.

The ancestry on both sides came from Germany. The paternal grandfather, named George Dreher, was born in Northampton County, Pa., married Lydia Heller, of the Heller family at Wind Gap, and soon after his marriage settled in Hamilton township, which afterwards became a part of Monroe County. In the year 1810 he moved to Stroudsburg, when his son Michael was but ten years of age.

The grandfather here carried on the tailoring business and also kept hotel in the old Stokes building, where the express office now stands.

His son, Michael H., on his arrival at manhood, became prominent in local circles and filled many offices of trust and profit in the county, being elected for many successive terms as prothonotary, register and recorder, associate judge, commissioners' clerk and to other positions of responsibility, the duties of all of which he performed with great acceptance. He died September 2, 1885, at the advanced age of eighty-five years, and was prompt and regular in the performance of his duties as commissioners' clerk up to a short time before his death.

Samuel S. Dreher, the subject of the present sketch, received his education in the private schools and in the academy at Stroudsburg, his first academic preceptor being the now venerable Frederick Knighton, who still survives to enjoy the satisfaction of witnessing the full development, in life and character, of the buds of early promise afforded by his young pupils. Young Dreher's second teacher at the academy was Ira B. Newman, and his third, Rev. J. B. Hyndshaw.

Having completed his preliminary education under these and other like faithful instructors, young Dreher, at the early age of about nineteen years, entered his name as a student-at-law in the office of Hon. M. M. Dimmick, the subject of the preceding sketch. A fellow-student in the same office was Nathan Huston, who was examined and admitted at the same time with young Dreher, to wit: at May Term, 1846. While still a student-at-law, Mr. Dreher clerked for some time in the office of the prothonotary and register and recorder, and thus obtained a practical insight into the details pertaining to those offices, which was of great service to him afterwards in his practice as a lawyer.

Immediately after his admission to the bar young Mr. Dreher entered into partnership with his former preceptor, Mr. Dimmick, under the firm-name of Dimmick & Dreher, an association which continued until the removal of Mr. Dimmick to Mauch Chunk, in 1854. During this interval, also, Mr. Dreher served two terms as district attorney, and after the dissolution of the firm of Dimmick & Dreher the latter continued the practice alone until his election, in the fall of 1870, as president judge of the old Twenty-second Judicial District, composed of the counties of Wayne, Pike, Monroe and Carbon.

Prior to his election to the bench Mr. Dreher had acquired an extensive practice, more particularly in the three counties last above named, and wherever known, whether as lawyer or judge, his name has ever been a synonym for unspotted integrity and probity of character, coupled with great legal acumen and an habitual courtesy and kindliness of heart and disposition inseparable from the man's nature, which made him the friend of all, high and low, rich and poor alike.

By act of 8th April, 1874, the old judicial district was cut in two, Wayne and Pike composing a separate district and retaining the old number, twenty-two, and Monroe and Carbon composing a new district known as the Forty-third. Judge Dreher's first term having expired in 1880, he was re-elected in the fall of that year, and we trust the judge has many years of future usefulness before him in a position he is so well calculated to adorn.

On the 21st of December, 1848, Judge Dreher married Sallie Phillips, a lady of Stroudsburg, by whom he has had five children, all of whom, together with several grandchildren, are still living, viz.: Anna (intermarried with Joseph Matlack, a hardware merchant of Philadelphia), Oscar (who is now teller in the First National Bank, Stroudsburg), Lizzie (intermarried with A. A. Dinsmore, Esq., of Stroudsburg), Howard (of Fontana, Kan.) and Addie W. (intermarried with Dr. J. P. Mutchler, of Stroudsburg).

In politics, Judge Dreher has always been a Democrat, as have been his father and brothers. In early life the judge was a warm and active partisan and always popular on the stump, and, although in later life, and particularly since going on the bench, he has kept aloof from active politics, at heart he is still true to his original political affiliations. In religion the judge is a Methodist, and has been for many years a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Stroudsburg.

Hon. William Davis.—The subject of this sketch may be truly denominated the father of the Monroe County bar.

With one exception, the first lawyer to locate in the county, Mr. Davis retained his health and faculties in undiminished vigor until a few years ago, when advancing years and a most assiduous devotion to that most exacting of all professions—the law—began to tell upon his iron constitution. Although he has now retired from practice in court, owing mainly to his impaired hearing, he is daily to be seen in his office and on the street, his well-known figure as erect, if not as active, as of yore.

Mr. Davis was born in Easton, Pa., February 17, 1813, and was the youngest of seven children of Moses Davis, intermarried with Mary Miller, both of whom resided for many years in Easton, and died there. On his father's side Mr. Davis is of Welsh extraction, and on his mother's of German.

His parents were members of the Episcopal Church at Easton, in the organization of which, and in the erection of the church edifice, his father took a very active part, and the subject of this sketch has always adhered to the faith of his father. Mr. Davis received his preliminary education in the schools of Easton, Allentown and Philadelphia, and entered Washington College, Hartford, Conn., but graduated from Union College, N. Y., in the class of 1833. After graduating, young Davis entered, as a student, the law-office of Hon. Joel Jones, at Easton, and upon the appointment of the latter as one of the judges of the District Court at Philadelphia, continued the study of his chosen profession under Hon. Hopewell Hepburn, also of Easton, where he was admitted to the bar April 20, 1836.

In December, 1837, the young lawyer moved permanently to Stroudsburg, the county-seat of the (then) new county of Monroe, and he "came to stay."

Peter Wyckoff, Esq., had located here ahead of him, but with that exception there was no other resident lawyer in the county. After being here some time Mr. Wyckoff offered to sell out his practice to the new-comer, but the sturdy reply was that he thought the field was wide enough for two lawyers, and he didn't wish to buy. The field in territorial extent was, indeed, a wide one, but sparsely populated, a good part of the county being, doubtless, at that early day, a wilderness. Although, in the course of years, other lawyers came in from other counties, and others still sprang up indigenous to the soil, the talents and industry of Mr. Davis speedily gave him a leading position at the bar, which he never relinquished until bodily infirmities compelled him to abandon his practice.

As a lawyer he has, during his whole professional career, been noted for the most exhaustive preparation of his cases and the most unflagging zeal in their presentation to court and jury. No adjudicated case, however remote its bearing upon the question at bar, escaped him; there was no legal principle available that he did not quickly seize upon and turn it to his advantage. He always seemed to delight in his professional work for the work's sake, and the amount of time and labor expended in a cause was very frequently out of all proportion to the pecuniary importance of the case or the amount of fees accruing from it. The triumph of the legal principle, the establishment of the facts contended for—these were the prime objects, and to their accomplishment he enthusiastically devoted unwearied days and nights of research, and secured the reports of the judicial decisions of both hemispheres.

As a cross-examiner, Mr. Davis was always particularly strong and searching. It was sometimes almost like putting a witness into a chemical retort and resolving him into his constituent elements, and woe to the man in whom the analysis disclosed the slightest falsehood or prevarication! Witnesses sometimes fainted under the ordeal.

Apropos to this is a story that Mr. Davis has often told himself, with much gusto, of a case in which his peculiar talent for cross-examination received due recognition. The case occurred in Pike County, where he was attending court, being concerned in other cases, but not having been originally concerned in this one. There were numerous defendants, and each had his own separate counsel, but one of the defendants, at the last moment before the case was called, retained Mr. Davis specially to "cross-examine ten dollars' worth," as the man put it. He did cross-examine, and the defendants were all acquitted.

Mr. Davis was very fond of attending the courts of Pike County, which he did for many years, scarcely missing a term. He had many friends there, and very often speaks in high terms of the kindness and hospitality of "little Pike."

When off duty, and in social intercourse, he was always one of the most interesting and hospitable of men, and his home was for many years the centre of the gayety and fashion of the town. When a young man Mr. Davis was appointed deputy attorney-general for the county, and in later life he served several terms as chief burgess of Stroudsburg. In 1868 he was one of the Presidential electors, and was a delegate-at-large to the Constitutional Convention of Pennsylvania, in 1872–73.

In politics he was originally a Whig, and continued with that party until it became merged in the Republican party, since which time he has always remained a stanch Republican. He was a delegate to the Chicago Convention in 1860, and aided in procuring the nomination of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Davis was married, on the 17th of May, 1838, in the city of Philadelphia, to Miss Sophia Heckman, of that city, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Joshua Rogers, then pastor of Trinity Church, Easton, Pa. Four children were born to them, two of whom died in infancy. Of the two surviving children, one is Dr. Arthur H. Davis, a practicing physician of Philadelphia, and the other, Mary Alice, intermarried with Rev. Theophilus Heilig, a clergyman of the Lutheran Church, resident in Stroudsburg.

Hon. James H. Walton was born in Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., where he received his preliminary as well as professional education. He studied law under Peter Wyckoff and William Davis, Esq., and was admitted about 1840. He soon acquired an extensive and lucrative practice, and was for many years closely identified with the business, political and social affairs of the county. Possessed of an easy address and popular manners, a fluent speaker, and of hospitable and genial nature, Mr. Walton was a favorite among the people, and a ready and effective political campaigner.

Having already filled several minor county offices, and one or more terms as State Senator, he was, in the year 1857, appointed by President Buchanan as treasurer of the United States Mint, in Philadelphia, and soon thereafter he removed with his family to that city. He continued to discharge the duties of his appointment with fidelity, until a change of administration brought in his successor, when he opened a broker's office, in South Third Street, in partnership with a Mr. Yost, under the firm-name of Walton & Yost. They did a large business for some years. About the year 1869 Mr. Walton returned to Stroudsburg and resumed the practice of his profession, which he continued up to the time of his death, in the year 1875.

Mr. Walton belonged to a large and influential family, being a son of Dr. William D. Walton, whose numerous descendants still live in and around Stroudsburg, although the immediate family of the subject of this sketch is broken up and scattered, his wife having died a few years after her husband, and his children being now settled in Philadelphia and elsewhere His youngest son, Harry, is a rising young lawyer of Philadelphia, giving much promise of a successful career.

Hon. Charlton Burnett was born in Stroudsburg, Pa., on August 31, 1826. He received an academic education, and for some years was engaged in teaching in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, subsequent to which he was engaged as a book-keeper in Newbern, N. C. On his return North, in the year 1846, he began reading law with the Hon. William Davis, in Stroudsburg, and pursued his studies under Mr. Davis for the period of four years, and was admitted to the bar of Monroe County in the year 1850. Subsequently he held the office of district attorney and county treasurer of the county of Monroe.

In 1866 he was elected a member of the Senate of Pennsylvania for the term of three years.

In 1875 he was again elected to the State Senate, serving as a member of that body during the years '76, '77 and '78.

On the expiration of his second term in the Senate he resumed his practice of the law, which he has pursued to the present time.

Rogers L. Burnett, a son of Hon. Charlton Burnett, was born in Stroudsburg, Pa., on October 25, 1856. He received a military education at the United States Academy at West Point, having been appointed a cadet at this institution, in the year 1874, by the Hon. John B. Storm, member of Congress from this district.

Upon leaving West Point, in the year 1878 he began reading law in the office of his father, and on February 28, 1882, was admitted to practice in the several courts of Monroe County.

In November, 1884, he was elected district attorney of Monroe County, which office he now holds.

Stephen Holmes was born near the village of Alfred, the county-seat of York County, Maine, May 16, 1836, and was the youngest of the four children of Stephen and Nancy (Meserve) Holmes. He received a thorough English education in the common schools of his native place, supplemented by an academic course at Alfred and at Limerick, in the same county, and at Yarmouth, near Portland, Maine, and at the age of eighteen, having completed his education, came to Pennsylvania. The next three years were spent in teaching school at different points in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and acting as clerk and book-keeper for different concerns. In May, 1858, he accepted the position of principal of the public schools of Stroudsburg, and, with the exception of one year, has since resided at that place. In the fall of 1858 he entered the office of Hon. S. S. Dreher, then one of the leading practitioners of Monroe County, as a student of law, still continuing to hold his position in connection with the public schools until the spring of 1861. At December Term, 1860, having previously passed a satisfactory examination before a committee, composed of William Davis, Esq., of Monroe, Lucius Barnes, Esq., of Pike, and Max Goepp, Esq., of Northampton Counties, he was admitted to practice in the several courts of Monroe County. While engaged in superintending the schools of the borough, and pursuing his studies, he also devoted himself quite extensively to literary work as contributor to various periodicals. In the fall of 1861 he entered upon the practice of his profession at Asbury, Warren County, New Jersey, but the field not proving a promising one, he returned to Stroudsburg in the fall of 1862, and the year following was elected district attorney of Monroe County, continuing to fill that position for three successive terms, until the fall of 1872. In the fall of 1869 he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the State, and at the present time is in the enjoyment of an extended practice in Monroe and adjoining counties.

As a lawyer Mr. Holmes has taken high rank in his profession, having been thoroughly fitted by his course of preparatory training for the attainment of its highest rewards. His career as district attorney first manifested to the public the possession of that acumen and fertility of resource so necessary in the incumbent of that office, and displayed to the fullest extent a persistency and determination of character that has since marked his career. He is a close and industrious student, preparing his cases with care and system, and neglecting no point that can be brought to bear in behalf of his client's interests. He is a good speaker, putting his points with force and cogency, and seldom failing to interest and hold the attention of the jury. He also occupies a prominent place as a man in the community in which he resides, and freely supports and lends his encouragement to all movements of a progressive or elevating character. He is a useful member and elder of the Stroudsburg Presbyterian Church, a member of the board of directors of the Stroudsburg Bank, of which institution he is counsel, and also counsel for the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. In politics he is an earnest supporter of the principles and purposes of the Democratic party, and an influential member of the party organization in Monroe County. He is held in universal respect by the community with which he has identified himself, and whose confidence he enjoys, and having accomplished what he has at so early a time in life, has a promising future before him. He married, in 1864, Miss Georgiana Blair, formerly of Hope, N. J., but more recently of Stroudsburg, Pa., and has three children, namely, Edith May, Frank Blair and Norman Meserve Holmes.

HON. JOHN B. STORM.—Foremost among the favorite children of old Monroe, of the present generation, we may place the subject of this sketch. Born in Hamilton township, in the year 1838, a farmer's son, his early years were passed in the occupations incident to his position, and presented meagre opportunities for mental culture. By sheer determination and force of character he pressed his way through the preparatory schools, and finally graduated from Dickinson College in the year 1861.

Immediately after graduating Mr. Storm commenced the study of law in the office of Hon. S. S. Dreher, and was admitted to practice in the year 1863. He had before this received the appointment of county superintendent of common schools, to fill a vacancy; and at the next election for that office was elected for the full term of three years, and subsequently re-elected. In the year 1870 he received the Democratic nomination for Congress, which was followed by his election to the Forty-second and two years later to the Forty-third Congresses. After serving four years as a member of these bodies he returned to the practice of his profession, which he pursued with great vigor and success until the year 1882, when he was again nominated over distinguished competitors for the Forty-eighth Congress. This nomination was again followed by his election, and again by his re-election in 1884, so that he may now be classed as a veteran in Congress.

The course of Mr. Storm in Congress has been conservative and judicious, and although he has not continually thrust himself upon public attention, his voice, whenever it has been raised on important questions, has commanded respectful consideration. As a public speaker Mr. Storm is possessed of more than ordinary ability, and in debate his efforts will compare favorably with the best of his contemporaries. As a lawyer he has acquired a large and lucrative practice and is noted for the zeal and success with which he conducts trials at the bar.

In politics he is an active and enthusiastic Democrat, laboring constantly for the success of his party. He has long been chairman of the Democratic County Committee.

As in secular concerns, so Mr. Storm carries the same spirit and vigor into religious matters and the interests of the church. He has long been a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stroudsburg, and occasionally supplies its pulpit—always with great acceptance.

He was married, in 1865, to Miss Harriet Brown, a daughter of Robert Brown, of East Stroudsburg, by whom he has had four children, three of whom—a daughter and two sons—survive.

Lewis M. Burson, born July 28, 1822, in Stroud township, Northampton County (now Monroe), received an academic education, commenced the study of law under John D. Morris, August, 1840, and in September, 1843, was admitted to practice. In June, 1849, he sailed from New York around Cape Horn to California and arrived in San Francisco December 20, 1849. While in California he was located most of the time in Humbold County, where he served several terms as district attorney and represented that county in the Legislature in the year 1860. In 1866 he went to Helena, Montana Territory, where he remained about two years and then returned to California. In the fall of 1870 he returned to Stroudsburg, where he has since resided.

Thomas McFall McIlhaney (1823–85), born in Lower Mount Bethel township, Northampton County, Pa., after serving the county as deputy prothonotary from 1854–57 and prothonotary from 1860 to 1878, late in life read law with Hon. Charlton Burnett, of Stroudsburg, and was admitted to practice as an attorney-at-law in 1880. He soon acquired considerable practice on account of his large acquaintance and the implicit confidence reposed in him by his many friends, and continued to labor successfully in his profession until his sudden decease. An extended sketch may be found of him in another chapter.

David S. Lee was born in Monroe County, Pa., August 19, 1840; engaged in teaching school at the age of seventeen years; October 16, 1862, enlisted in the army; was orderly sergeant of Company H, One Hundred and Seventy-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was honorably discharged October 17, 1863, by reason of expiration of term; was vice-principal of the Mauch Chunk Academy, Carbon County, in the latter part of 1863, and in 1864–65. In 1865 commenced the reading of law at Mauch Chunk, under Hon. M. M. Dimmick. In the latter part of the same year he removed to Stroudsburg, and became principal of Stroudsburg Academy, which position he held for two years, at the same time continuing his legal studies under Hon. C. Burnett. He was admitted to the bar of Monroe County February 28, 1867.

In 1872 Mr. Lee was elected district attorney over numerous competitors, after a spirited canvass, and was subsequently twice re-elected, serving until the fall of 1881.

Charles B. Staples was born at Stroudsburg, Pa., November 24, 1853, the son of Richard S. and Mary A. Staples; was educated in common and select schools, and fitted for college under a private tutor; entered Dickinson College in 1870, and graduated in 1874, the second in his class in rank, and bearing the honor of class prophet, and anniversarian of the Belles-Lettres Literary Society. He studied law under William Davis, Esq., and was admitted to practice May 26, 1876. In 1880 Mr. Staples was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention, held in Cincinnati. In 1881 he was elected school director of the borough of Stroudsburg, which office, however, he resigned after serving one year. In 1882 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee. On May 14, 1885, he was appointed collector of internal revenue of the Twelfth Pennsylvania District by President Cleveland, and assumed the duties of the office June 8, 1885.

Archibald A. Dinsmore is the third child of Thomas H. and Elizabeth M. Dinsmore. He was born at West Point, Lee County, Iowa, October 30, 1851. In the spring of 1853 his parents removed to Washington, Washington County, Iowa, where they resided until the spring of 1859, and lived subsequently at Van Rensselaer, Mo., and at other points in that State and in Kansas, where the subject of this sketch received an academic and collegiate education.

In September, 1873, he came to Stroudsburg and taught in the public school until June, 1874, when he became assistant book-keeper for the Tanite Company, where he remained over a year, and then commenced the study of law under Hon. C. Burnett; was admitted to the bar May 26, 1876.

In 1877 Mr. Dinsmore was commissioned county superintendent of common schools to fill a vacancy. The following year he was elected for the term of three years, and has been since twice re-elected. He was married November 15, 1877, to Elizabeth, second daughter of Hon. Samuel S. Dreher, by whom he has had two children, a son and a daughter.

John B. Williams is the oldest son of Jeremiah and Susan Ruth Williams, born at South Sterling, Wayne County, Pa., June 21, 1854; educated in common schools, Hollisterville Academy, at Hollisterville, and in the State Normal School, at Trenton, N. J.; commenced life as a school-teacher, then served several years as a book-keeper and correspondent for a glass manufacturing company. He then registered as a student-at-law under A. A. Dinsmore, Esq., and was admitted to practice in December, 1884. He has given some attention to military affairs, and is now captain of Company F, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania National Guards.

Henry J. Kotz, born at New Village (now Bangor), Northampton County, Pa., March 4, 1846, is the eldest son of Jeremiah Kotz. He received an academic education at the Moravian School, at Nazareth, Pa., and afterwards graduated at Eastman Commercial College; studied law under Hon. J. B. Storm, and was admitted to the bar December 16, 1879; was elected district attorney in 1881 and served one term.

Jos. H. Shull, born August 17, 1848, a son of Elias Shull, of Northampton County, Pa., was educated at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.; read law under Hon. Charlton Burnett, and was admitted to the bar in the year 1878.

Cicero Gearhart, is a son of S. Rees Gearhart, of Chestnut Hill township, Monroe County, Pa.; educated at Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa.; read law under A. A. Dinsmore, Esq., and was admitted to the bar October 2, 1885.

John E. Shull was born August 5, 1846, in Lower Mount Bethel township, Northampton County, Pa., a son of Elias and Margaret Shull; was educated at Lafayette College and spent some time in teaching; read law under John A. Nash, Esq., of Pottsville, Pa., and was admitted there in November, 1881; removed to Stroudsburg in 1883.

There are many more names which ought to grace these pages,—names of former practitioners at this bar, some of whom have removed to other localities, and many more of whom are dead; names of men who have been prominent and honored members of society and a power in their profession,—but our space is limited and will not permit of more extended notices. We have aimed to give a list of all who are now in active practice, of all living and retired members resident here, together with a few of the best known deceased members. Our work has been done amid the turmoil of professional engagements, and without that opportunity for care and deliberation which we could have desired, but we have certainly endeavored to deal fairly and impartially with all, living and dead. In the language of an immortal utterance,—"With malice towards none, but with charity for all,"—we invoke the spirit of charity from all concerned toward these desultory and imperfect sketches.

CHAPTER III.

MEDICINE AND PHYSICIANS — PERSONAL SKETCHES[1]—DENTAL SURGERY.

THE physicians of Monroe, and formerly of Northampton County, have always been held in high esteem. Some of the oldest and most prominent names of the profession have been included among them.

Though there has never been any medical association organized in the county, the dignity and honor of the profession have been generally of a high standard. A member might occasionally act in such a way as to forfeit the confidence of his brethren, but he has soon found the necessity to conform to the principles which are requisite for fraternity in such a profession. The healthfulness of the region has been always proverbial. The seekers after health have resorted to the glens, hill and dales, and have been generally repaid for the visit. At this time the salubrity is so renowned that scarcely a farm-house which has an extra chamber and which is within accessible distance can be found that is not occupied by "summer boarders." The Water Gap was the original place of attraction, but the overflow affects the whole country to a great extent. The influence, too, of this irruption into our houses is also very perceptible upon the culture of the residents. The difference in the manners, in the mode of expression and in the choice of words has banished the former rustic uncouthness, and the people who were formerly regarded as "back-woods population" show a degree of refinement that often surprises. Almost every country home is thus converted into a health invigorating resort, and if it cannot be said that the sojourn among the hills imparts a civilizing influence, it can be truly asserted that it has "softened the rude, and calmed the boisterous mind."

Another incidental influence, though perhaps not of a salubrious character, though it may be considered such remotely, is the active religious element that is impressed into many of the country churches. Earnest Christain workers are often among the guests who resort to the different localities, who take a deep interest in the undeveloped religious material, and not only invest it with a different life, but impress upon the people the possibility, as well as the luxury, of doing good.

Invalids among the strangers are at times numerous, and the salubrity of the climate or the gentle exercise of fishing or hunting, together with the advice of some judicious physician, contribute towards the re-establishment of partial health. There have been some instances of extreme longevity, as in the case of George Le Bar, elsewhere noticed, and a hale old age is not uncommonly seen on the streets and at the homes in the country.

Among the names having more than a local reputation is that of Linderman. The father of the two more distinguished of the name was John J. Linderman, of German descent, who settled in Pike County, where he practiced medicine for more than fifty years. He married a daughter of Hon. Richard Brodhead and sister of Hon. Richard Brodhead, late Senator from Pennsylvania.

DR. HENRY RICHARD LINDERMAN, son of the above, was born in Lehman township, Pike County, December 26, 1825. After as thorough an academic education as the opportunities afforded, he read and practiced medicine with his father, having attended the Medical Department of the University of New York, and the New York Hospital. He remained in the practice of his profession until the year 1845. In the early part of 1851 he removed to Carbon County, where he remained nearly three years. In September, 1853, he was appointed principal clerk in the office of director of the Mint, in Philadelphia. He continued in this position until 1865, acquiring the knowledge of the duties which so fully qualified him for his subsequent position. In 1867 he was appointed a director of the Mint, which place he filled two years. In July, 1869, he was selected by the Secretary of the Treasury to examine the branch Mints and obviate the wastage in smelting gold and silver bullion. He suggested several improvements, which were adopted in the coinage, and in preparing the act of 1873. In this latter year he was again appointed director and organized what is known as the Mint Bureau. In 1877 he published "Views" on the financial question then occupying the attention of the country, particularly upon the money and legal tender in the United States. He died at Washington, January, 1879, and was buried at Bethlehem, Pa.

Dr. Garrett Brodhead Linderman, brother of the foregoing, was born October 15, 1829, also in Pike County. He received his academic education in his native county, until he was prepared to enter upon the study of medicine, which he prosecuted under his father's direction, and was graduated in March, 1851, at the University of New York, whence his father and brother had graduated before him. He first settled at Unionville, Orange County, N. Y., but in 1854 left there for Mauch Chunk. In 1863 he was a partner in the firm of Packer, Linderman & Co., in the East Sugar Loaf Colliery. After 1867 he assumed the agency for the sale of coal in New York, and was instrumental in the organization of the Lehigh Coal Exchange. In 1870 he removed to Bethlehem, and in 1872 organized the Lehigh Valley National Bank there, having established the reputation of being one of the soundest and most progressive business men in Pennsylvania.

Dr. Francis Joseph Smith (Aerts) settled in Stroud township as a physician, and married Elizabeth Brodhead, to whom were born five daughters and a son,—Francis Joseph. Dr. Smith was skillful in his profession and a man well known throughout the Minisink Valley. We give a short sketch penned by himself,—

"I was born in Brussels, capital city of the Austrian Netherlands. My true name is Josephus Jacobus Aerts, son of Z. B. Aerts, Lord of Opdorp and Immerseele. I altered my name in the year 1777, when I proceeded to join the American Army. I would not expect to travel through Europe (as I had to go through France), by that name, without being exposed to being arrested by the despotism, either of the Emperatine or that of the daughter—the Queen of France. I took the name of Smith, and my passports both in England and France under it, also my commission from Congress, etc. I was brought up in the Roman Catholic religion, in which I was regularly instructed. Having been employed from my youth to a military life, but, at the same time, to the study of all nations, and their histories, possessing the German, Low Dutch, French, English, Italian and a part of the Greek languages, the means of acquiring information were by their aid facilitated. I took, from the age of eighteen, an extreme aversion to despotic and monarchical governments, which, in part, was the occasion of my being made a State prisoner, and confined in irons in a dungeon for six months, when I made a lucky escape from the prison in Tomfels.

"I went into Holland, where I took service in order to be protected by the military. Colonel Mans, who commanded the regiment of the Prince of Milburg was my friend, and protected me until his death, when I traveled through the greater part of Europe, until I was suffered to be returned to Brussels. Having endeavored to acquire the knowledge of the religions of all kinds of nations, sects, etc. I am now forty-six or forty-seven years of age, and the result of my inquiries is endorsed in the following lines:

"All sects and religions differ with one another, but all agree that there is one God. . . . Ever since 1777 I have lived in America. My parents died in the meanwhile, and, as a Rebel, disinherited me. My brother, Henricus Aerts, Lord of Borm and Opdorp, invaded my patrimony, which, I think, ought to amount to one hundred thousand florins, if not more. The French Republic, I hope, will keep the Netherlands and do justice to my children, with distinction on an equal basis. My reasons for acting as I have done are best known to myself. To this I would add that if it was not done, I should do it again. However, these reasons are known to some of my friends, who will do me the justice to explain them at a future day, if I should not have time or opportunity to do it myself. After my decease, I wish these few lines might be published, if any of my friends shall see cause for it. My desire, further, is to be buried on a separate spot in the woods, and on land claimed by me, without any pomp or ceremony; carried by old Continental officers or soldiers, who will be so obliging as to perform that service."

DR. ABRAHAM REEVES JACKSON is a native of Philadelphia, born June 17, 1827. His parents were Washington and Deborah Lee Jackson. After a thorough education in the public schools of that city he was graduated with honor at the Central High School. His first inclination was for civil engineering, but finding it not so congenial to his taste as he had anticipated, he entered the Medical Department of Pennsylvania College, from which he graduated in 1848. His first location was Kresgeville, in Monroe County, whence he removed to Columbia, N. J., and thence to Stroudsburg, in December 1849. Here he was engaged in the practice of medicine twenty years, and few have ever been members of the medical fraternity who have attained and deserved a higher reputation. In 1862 he entered the United States Army as contract surgeon, but was shortly appointed assistant medical director of the Army of Virginia. His constant exposure to the malarious influences of the climate and camp life brought on an attack of typhoid, which compelled his return to Stroudsburg. Through his exertions was organized the Monroe County Agricultural Society, which was of great utility, and of which he was secretary for several years. Those who have read Mark Twain's "Innocents Abroad," will remember the "Doctor," who gave occasion and richly enjoyed the humor of his stateroom chum.

In May, 1870 he removed to Chicago, having lost his wife, and entered upon what had long been entertained as the most important sphere of his life. He projected and carried into successful operation the establishment of a hospital, exclusively for women. This institution was incorporated September, 1871, and has become one of the most beneficent institutions in the West. In 1872 he was appointed lecturer on gynæcology in Rush Medical College, which position he held for a number of years, and relinquished it only when his extensive practice demanded it.

Dr. Jackson is a valued contributor to the best medical journals, and is everywhere recognized as an authority in his favorite department of the science. Since 1874 he has edited the Chicago Medical Register. He is now president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago, and also professor of gynæcology in the same institution. He is also associate editor of the Independent Practitioner of New York, and of the Western Medical Reporter of Chicago. In addition to his arduous professional duties, he is fond of literature, and able to indulge his taste in this pastime. He is also a remarkably social person, and a favorite in all society wherever he makes his entrance. He is a religious man, having early connected himself with the Presbyterian Church. Upon the removal of Dr. Jackson from Stroudsburg, he relinquished his practice in favor of his brother, George W. Jackson, who remained in the profession and acquired considerable reputation until a premature demise, in 1877.

PHILIP M. BUSH.—In a little hamlet called Marshall's Creek, and about six miles north of Stroudsburg, still lives Dr. Philip M. Bush, at an advanced age, though very active and energetic. His family was of Holland origin. The two streams of settlement, viz., that of Holland origin from New Amsterdam following the Hudson or North River, and the English from Philadelphia, following the "South" or Delaware, met about Bushkill or Shawnee, and the traces of each are distinctly perceptible to this day.

The Bush family, or Bosch, as written by the Hollanders, seems to have crossed over from Esopus or Rondout, on the Hudson, and met the north-moving colonists from Philadelphia, and settled on the plain about Shawnee.

Dr. Bush was born in Stroud township. He studied medicine with Dr. Herring, of Hamilton township, then in the county of Northampton.

He attended the medical institution of Jefferson College, in Philadelphia, during the winters of 1833 and 1834. He settled at Craig's Meadows immediately upon his leaving the college, and remained till 1838, when he removed to his present place of residence. He was chosen to the State Legislature and served in 1847, but refused any subsequent political honors.

He has had a large practice, and though over fifty years in the profession, his interest has not waned, but he is still familiar with the literature of the profession. He still visits patients, and is preferred by many of those who know him to any one of younger years.

DR. HORACE BUSH, son of Philip M., was born at Marshall's Creek; and was graduated at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, in 1875. He practiced medicine at East Stroudsburg, in partnership with his brother for a time, when he removed to Wyalusing, Bradford County, where he still resides.

DR. LEWIS BUSH was born June 3, 1848, on his father's homestead at Marshall's Creek, Smithfield township, Monroe County. His parents were Dr. Philip M. Bush, whose life and ancestry are elsewhere written of in this volume, and Sarah (La Bar) Bush, daughter of George La Bar, a descendant of an old family in Monroe County.

The early life of Dr. Bush was passed upon the home-farm, during which time he acquired a portion of his education at the district school, and in attendance at the old Stroudsburg Seminary, taught by Mrs. Lizzie Malvern. He closed his educational course at Wyoming Seminary, Kingston, Luzerne County, Pa. In 1869 he commenced the study of medicine with his father, and subsequently attended lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1872. That same year he located in practice at the Delaware Water Gap, where he remained only a few months, and then established himself at East Stroudsburg, where he has since continued in the active and successful practice of his profession. In April, 1883, he admitted to partnership with him Dr. Irvine R. Bush, also a graduate of Jefferson Medical College in the class of 1883, the present firm being known as Drs. L. & I. R. Bush, and enjoying a wide and extended practice.

Dr. Bush is recognized as one of the most progressive and public-spirited citizens of East Stroudsburg, and is identified closely with the development of the varied interests of the place. He has always taken deep interest in the schools of the borough and served as a director for three years, and as secretary of the school board for the past two years. He is the owner of the rink and other real estate in East Stroudsburg, contributes freely to church and other worthy institutions, and is justly popular among his fellow-citizens. He married, in 1874, Anna Louisa, daughter of Joseph Huntsberger, of Centreville, Northampton County, Pa.

Dr. I. R. Bush was born at Shawnee, April 14, 1859; entered the State Normal School at Millersville, Pa., in the spring of 1879. He began the study of medicine under his brother, Lewis Bush, in the fall of 1879. He began his course of medical lectures and study in the University of Michigan in 1880, and continued it in the Jefferson Medical College, at Philadelphia, graduating thence in the spring of 1883. He has since resided in East Stroudsburg and practices in connection with his brother.

Dr. C. M. Bronnell is a native of Central New York, and was graduated at the Homœopathic Medical School, in Philadelphia, in 1883. The removal of Dr. Dungan left a vacancy which he has ably supplied, and he is working himself into what is called a good practice.

Dr. Cicero Brodhead, the son of Luke W. Brodhead, of Delaware Water Gap, was born November 13, 1852. He studied medicine with Dr. A. Reeves Jackson and was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in the spring of 1875. During his brief professional life he endeared himself greatly to the community, and died February, 1884.

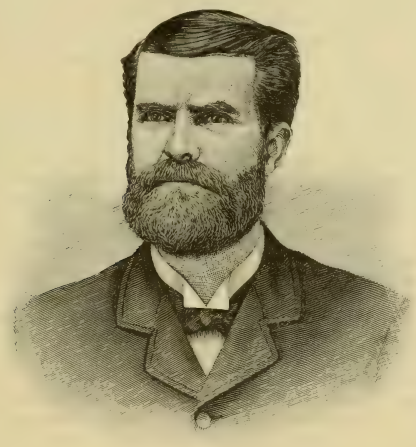
Dr. M. G. Lesh was born in Hamilton township and attended the common schools near his father's home. He entered the State Normal School at Kutztown, where he passed the term of 1867–68. He was a teacher in the district schools of the county six years. He entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1873. He attended also a post-graduate course at the same institution one year. After three and a half years' practice in other communities he settled in East Stroudsburg in 1877. His reputation as a physician is proven by the fact that during the short time he has been in practice he has had no less than nine students whom he has directed into the mysteries of the profession.

Dr. James Hollinshead, one of the oldest practitioners of the county which was afterwards called Monroe, was born in Philadelphia December 31, 1768, being the eleventh in a family of thirteen children. He was educated in his native city so as to qualify himself for teaching, which he entered upon at Salem, N. J., where he engaged in the study of medicine and was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania.

He removed to Stroudsburg about the year 1792 and lived on the Posten farm, about a mile north of what is now East Stroudsburg. He practiced here about eighteen years and established a reputation as a person of more than ordinary skill, being frequently the preferred consulting physician in critical or serious cases till near the close of his life. He was appointed a justice of the peace soon after his settlement in the county, in which capacity he acted for many years.

Dr. Hollinshead was of a very social disposition, cheerful and inclined to mirthfulness. He favored all religious denominations impartially, and when no opportunity for attendance upon his preferred choice occurred he was always an attendant upon the Quaker meetings. He was highly respected and married into the Stroud family. He died near Stroudsburg March 31, 1831.

Dr. Frank Hollinshead, grandson of the above, was born at Stroudsburg June 6, 1826. He studied medicine under the direction of Dr. W. P. Vail and was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania April, 1848. He settled at Richmond, Northampton County, Pa., almost immediately upon graduation, where he remained till 1854, when he returned to Stroudsburg, and after two years of languishing illness he died December 24, 1856.



Dr. N. C. E. Guth was born May 2, 1850, in South Whitehall township, Lehigh County, Pa., received his academic education at Millersville State Normal School and professional education at the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated March, 1873. His first settlement was at Perkasie, Bucks County, where he remained till October, 1876. He then removed to Gilbert's, Monroe County, where he has since resided. Besides the calls of his profession Dr. Guth is an active and efficient worker in Sunday-schools and all agencies of a beneficent character.

Dr. J. F. Lesh was born in Hamilton township and attended the common school of his district. He also attended the University of Pennsylvania in 1876. Soon after leaving the university he was appointed resident physician of the State Hospital at Harrisburg, which he occupied one year. He was settled for a short time at Weisport, and for one and a half years at Sand Cut, also at East Stroudsburg one year. He is now a professor in an institution in Kansas.

Dr. Amzi Le Bar, son of J. Depue Le Bar, and his wife, Sarah Ann (Bush) Le Bar, was born in the township of Pahaquarry, Warren County, New Jersey, November 16, 1842. When six years of age his father removed to his native township of Smithfield, where the Le Bar family settled at a very early period, as will be seen elsewhere in this volume, and there the boyhood of the doctor was passed. He attended the district school of the township, where he derived the rudiments of an English education, and until 1862 assisted his father in his business of farming, lumbering and store-keeping, and engaged in school-teaching. That year he enlisted in Company G, one hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, as orderly-sergeant, and served in the army in behalf of the Union cause until July 3, 1863, when he was discharged because of disability resulting from fever, having attained the rank of second lieutenant. For some time after his discharge he was sick at home, and it was the fall of 1864 before he regained his health. He then traveled for a few months in Wisconsin and Iowa, and taught school at Shawnee in the winter of 1864.

In the fall of 1867 located in the practice of his profession at Elmer, in South New Jersey, where he remained until February, 1868. He then located in Ashley, Pa., in what is now Luzerne County, and engaged in practice there until November, 1871, when he removed to East Stroudsburg, Monroe County. In the spring of 1874 he established himself at Stroudsburg, the county-seat of Monroe County, where he has since remained in the enjoyment of a large and successful practice. In July,

A. LeRoy

In the spring of 1865 he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. H. R. Barnes, formerly of Allentown, Pa., but then practicing at Shawnee, and in the fall of that year began attending lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he enjoyed the benefits of three courses, including two in the summer season, and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1867. After graduation he remained for still another lecture season, and 1880, he purchased the old Hollinshead drug-store on Main Street, and is now devoting his chief attention to the large business which he has secured there, chiefly limiting his professional work to office practice, though not altogether refusing to go outside to visit his regular patients. His practice includes all the branches of medical treatment prescribed by the profession, and has not been limited to any specialty, although in the department of obstetrics his experience has been extensive and successful. He occupies a leading social position in Stroudsburg, and is one of the progressive and enterprising citizens of the place. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church since he was eighteen years of age, and takes an active part in connection with church work in Stroudsburg, being superintendent of the Sabbath-school at the present writing. He married, in 1868, Marietta, daughter of Samuel Bush, deceased of Shawnee, and has children,— John Clyde and Mary Le Bar.

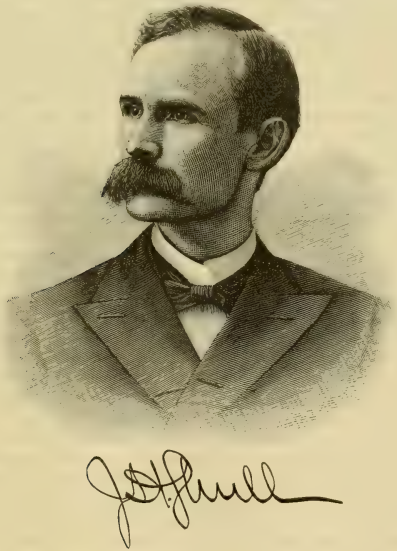
Thomas W. Loweree resided in Stroudsburg from 1870 to 1872, more for the recuperation of his own health than for the practice of his profession.

Dr. S. S. Levering was born November 3, 1839, received his academical education at Wyoming Seminary and at the age of seventeen began the study of medicine. In 1859 he commenced practicing in connection with his father. In 1863 he located himself in Pleasant Valley, where he remained eight years, when he removed to Brodheadsville. In this place he was engaged in active practice till November, 1884, the time of his death. He was a man widely known and of considerable skill in his profession.

George W. Seip, for the brief period that he resided in Stroudsburg, left a reputation for activity that is seldom acquired after a much longer time. He first settled in Tannersville March 14, 1862, and moved to Stroudsburg May 15, 1866, where he remained till October, 1874, when he removed to Philadelphia. He is now at Reading, connected with the Eye and Ear Infirmary of that city.

William H. Seip, brother of the above, settled at Tannersville in the spring of 1859, but removed to Bath in a short time, where he still resides.



J. Anson Singer settled at Brodheadsville in the spring of 1883; was graduated at the University of the City of New York just previous.

Several doctors have for a short time settled at Delaware Water Gap, but the proximity to Stroudsburg seems to have given the invalids there a preference for the established physicians of Stroudsburg, so that their stay has been very brief. Joseph B. Shaw, however, has prolonged his residence there until he seems to have made it his local habitation. Dr. Shaw was born at Cape May City, N. J., September 17, 1845. His father, being a sea-captain, removed to Philadelphia, which gave the son an opportunity to attend the schools there. After his academic education he passed four years in a drug-store and graduated from the College of Pharmacy in 1866. He then established himself in the same business at Darby, Pa. During this time he studied medicine with his brother-in-law and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1877. In 1879 he removed to Delaware Water Gap, and has succeeded in fixing himself there permanently.

Dr. Joseph H. Shull is a descendant in the fourth generation of Elias Shull, who resided at an early period in the western portion of Northampton County, Pa. The family is of German origin, but the exact time of their emigration to this country is not known. Philip, son of Elias and grandfather of Dr. Shull, originally resided at what was known as the "Dutch Settlement," in Northampton County. He married Margaret Bryant, of English descent, and had a family of children, of whom Elias was the father of Dr. Shull. His wife was Margaret Eakin, a representative of an old Scotch-Irish family, and to them were born five children, of whom the subject of this sketch was second. The others are John E. Shull, principal of the borough schools of Stroudsburg; Jennie, wife of Peter Ross, of Bangor, Pa.; Philip, a farmer in Union County, Pa.; Samuel Eakin, principal of the schools at South Easton; and Elias, engaged in the printing business in Cleveland, O. Dr. Shull's father was a farmer, a member of the State Legislature from Northampton County.

Dr. Shull was born at Martin's Creek, Northampton County, Pa., August 17, 1848. His earliest education was derived at the district school at that place, and was followed by a special course of study under his uncle, Alexander S. Shull, and at Blairstown Academy, N. J., under A. A. Stevens, principal. He subsequently entered Lafayette College, Easton, in the class of 1873, but did not complete the curriculum. After a year at college life he engaged in teaching in Easton, and began the study of medicine with Dr. Q. E. Snyder, continuing with Dr. Traill Green, of Easton. He then attended medical lectures at the Long Island Hospital College for a term, but subsequently entered Bellevue Hospital College, New York City, where he completed his medical education and was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in February, 1873.

Immediately after graduating he began practice in the hospital connected with the college, and remained there nine months. Late in the year 1873 he returned to Stroudsburg, Pa., and entered upon the active practice of his profession. With the exception of the absence of a few months in 1874, during which time he traveled in the West and South, he has been in successful and continuous practice in Stroudsburg since the period of his location there. He is recognized as one of the most skillful and reliable practitioners of Monroe County, and his services and medical knowledge are in constant demand. He is one of the most energetic and studious citizens of Stroudsburg, and is constantly adding to his store of knowledge and extending the sphere of his usefulness. Having been called as an expert witness to testify in several important cases in the courts of Monroe and Northampton Counties, he formed the idea of acquiring the legal profession also, and after two years of special preparation in the office of Colonel Charlton Burnett, of Stroudsburg, was duly admitted to the bar of Monroe County in 1877, after a satisfactory examination. He was thus one of the few men in the State who is a member of both the legal and medical professions. He has engaged in the practice of law to some extent, but is chiefly occupied at the present writing in the practice of medicine and in looking after various business enterprises with which he is identified. He is largely interested in the development of the slate interests of Northampton County, and part owner of the Monroe Democrat, of Stroudsburg. He is an ardent supporter of the principles and policy of the Democratic party, and one of the leaders in that organization in Monroe County. He is the presiding officer of Barger Lodge, No. 325, F. and A. M., of Stroudsburg, a member of Martin's Creek Lodge, I. O. O. F., and connected with other organizations and enterprises calculated to promote the material or social prosperity of the community in which he resides. He married, May 1, 1873, Miss M. V. Flory, of Bangor, Pa., and has three children,—Claude, Samuel and Lucille Shull.

DR. F. W. SOPER succeeded Dr. J. W. Flick in practice in 1884 in Stroudsburg, where he remained till November, 1885, and removed to Philadelphia.

DR. SAMUEL STOKES came to Stroudsburg from Bucks County about 1820. He first associated with his practice the business of an apothecary, there being no supplies of that kind obtainable nearer than Easton. He gradually made it his business, and with the intermission of three years at Kellersville, resided in Stroudsburg until his death, in 1858. Dr. Stokes' residence and place of business was that now occupied by Hon. S. S. Dreher.

DR. W. E. GREGORY was graduated in medicine in the spring of 1877, and selected Scioto as a place of settlement. He is at present a member of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

DR. E. GREWER was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in the spring of 1873. His first settlement was at Maple Grove, near Bushkill, in 1878. With the interruption of about one year, he has resided there until the present time. Dr. Grewer has acquired quite a reputation for skill in surgery.

DR. W. J. GULICK removed to Stroudsburg in July, 1881, and is acquiring an extensive practice.

The name of Grattan became one of the most celebrated of the last century. In the person of Henry Grattan the world enjoyed oratory almost equal to that of Demosthenes. The lines of Lord Byron will be remembered,—

> "With all that Demosthenes wanted, endowed,
> And his rival or master in all he possessed."

THOS. GRATTAN, a grandson of Henry, was born in Parsontown, County Kings, Ireland, June 23, 1796. He was educated in Dublin, where he passed a full collegiate course in the arts, and upon graduation turned his attention to the study of medicine. Under the direction of his uncle, he became assistant in an infirmary. His marriage, in 1816, led to a rupture with his uncle, and he emigrated to America. He settled in the northern part of the county now Monroe and later near Marshall's Falls. His practice in Ireland gave him remarkable skill as a surgeon, which he exhibited on several critical occasions, and is said to have never left a patient crippled. His rare exhibition of skill in his profession rendered him a distinguished person in all other respects. His generous nature, stimulated, perhaps, by familiarity with the lowly and the pauper population in his native land, induced him to never neglect a call for the service he could so effectively render. Regardless of his own comfort and apparently of his own health, he was attentive to every applicant. Thus Dr. Grattan lived and labored till April 12, 1864, when he died at the age of nearly sixty-eight. Another of the name, Matthew George Grattan, was born in Ireland May 6, 1818, and was brought to America when only three months old. His parents came and settled in Smithfield, while his medical education was pursued at Geneva, N. Y. He returned to Smithfield and entered upon the duties of his profession, which he pursued only a short time, as he died January 25, 1849. His talents were of a superior order and his character unblemished. Monroe County feels a just pride in having adopted them.

DR. GEORGE H. RHOADS was born in Huntingdon Valley, Pa., January 9, 1857. He obtained an education chiefly in the public schools of Philadelphia, supplemented by an academical course at Wilmington, Del. He was graduated in medicine at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, in the class of 1879, and selected Tobyhanna as a field for medical practice, with a fair prospect of success.

Dr. J. W. Flick is a native of Germany; was graduated at one of the medical schools in Philadelphia in 1879. His preparatory studies were pursued at Dover, Del. His settlement in Stroudsburg was followed by unusual success. Desirous of doing still better, he removed to Scranton in 1881, whence, after a few months, he removed to Honeoye Falls, N. Y.

Dr. Samuel L. Foulke was born in the vicinity of Stroudsburg, graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1874, but has confined his attention principally to a drug-store.

Dr. George W. Dungan, a native of the western part of the county, settled in Stroudsburg, June, 1876, and remained until 1884, when he entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His practice was homœopathy, and after his first Conference appointment at Tannersville, he still continued the practice of medicine at Stroudsburg, until his removal from the county.

Dr. Nathaniel C. Miller, a son of Philip Miller, of Stroudsburg, and grandson of the late Charles Miller, of Monroe County, and also of Hon. Jacob Cope, of Northampton County, was born in 1848. He began the study of medicine at the early age of sixteen, with Dr. A. R. Jackson, and was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1870. He has been in active practice ever since his graduation. As a surgeon, he has performed some remarkable operations, specifically, by amputation at the shoulder joint and of the arm above the elbow. He holds high rank as a physician and surgeon in the town and county, and is a contributor to the medical journals.

Dr. Simon E. Miller, born in Stroud township, 1848, also read medicine with Dr. A. R. Jackson, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1870; practiced in Monroe County ten years, when he removed to Wisconsin, where he at present resides.

The name of Walton many years ago was prominent in the medical profession, and has been perpetuated to the third generation with distinction and renown.

Dr. William Davis Walton was born at North Wales, Montgomery County, Pa., December 24, 1781, and received his medical education at the University of Pennsylvania. He soon after settled at Stroudsburg, where he was engaged in active practice till November 18, 1863, the time of his death.

Dr. Sydenham Walton, son of William D., was educated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1833, and, in connection with his father and uncle, divided the practice of the town and county. He was highly esteemed as a citizen and physician. He was born April 30, 1812, and died June 3, 1873.

Dr. Charles Jenkins Walton, son of William D., was born at Stroudsburg September 8, 1815, was graduated at the Geneva Medical College, and practiced till May 22, 1856, the time of his death.

Dr. Davis D., son of William D., was born October 12, 1822, graduated at the University of Pennsylvania, and practices still in Stroudsburg, where he first commenced his profession.

Dr. William Palmer Walton, son of Davis D., was born October 6, 1817, and was educated at Geneva Medical College. He practiced in connection with his father to the time of his death, in 1880.

Dr. Thomas Carey Walton, son of Sydenham, was born in Stroudsburg in 1854, studied medicine under the direction of his uncle, Davis D., was graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1878, and settled in Stroudsburg as the third generation of the Walton family. He finds constant employment in the duties of his profession, and sustains well the reputation of the family name.

Dr. J. P. Mutchler, a native of Warren County, N. J., studied medicine under the direction of Dr. Amzi Le Bar, with whom he was associated in practice for a year, and at present with Dr. J. H. Shull. He graduated in 1875.

Dr. Charles Vail, a native of New Jersey, was settled in Stroudsburg before the organization of the present county. He had a large practice and was a successful physician. He died about 1836.

Dr. William P. Vail, brother of Charles, succeeded him at his death, and was also highly esteemed in his profession and as an earnest Christian gentleman. He removed about 1848 to Johnsonsburg, Warren County, N. J., where he resided about twenty-five years. He now resides at Roselle, N. J.

Dr. Jackson Lantz.[1]—At an early period of our colonial history the ancestor of the Lantz family, of Sussex County, N. J., emigrated from the province of Alsace, Germany. Jacob Lantz was born in Germany in 1741, and settled on his Hampton farm (now known as the Dunn farm), situated between Newton and Washingtonville, Sussex County, N. J., about 1759. He added other acres to his possessions, at one time owning the present site of Washingtonville. But the Dunn farm was the homestead where he lived and died, in 1827, in his eighty-fourth year. His wife, Mary, reached her eighty-seventh year. The family name has different spellings, according to locality: Lance, Lants, Lents and Lantz, the last being probably the correct one.

Jacob Lantz married and had born to him three sons and six daughters, who lived to maturity, namely,—George, Peter, Jacob, Margaret, Anna, Mary, Sophia, Eliza and Barbara.

Jackson Lantz.

The daughters were married as follows: Margaret to Peter L. Struble; Anna to Peter Smith; Mary to William Snook; Sophia to Peter Hendershot; Eliza to John Anderson; Barbara to Antone Longcore. The sons also married and settled in their native county, with the exception of Peter, who finally located in Bradford County, Pa., where he raised a family consisting of two sons and four daughters. Jacob settled at Andover, N. J., and had five children, namely,—David, George N., Mary, Catharine and Eliza. George, the eldest son of the second generation, and grandfather of the subject of this sketch, married Catherine Hand, and about 1790 settled in Frankford township, on a farm now owned and resided on by his son William, located about seven miles northeast of Newton, where he died. The land was mostly a forest; but industry, energized by a laudable desire for competence, soon transformed the forest into good farm land, and the price of his labor being high and land comparatively low, he soon greatly added to his possessions, and at his death was the owner of five or six farms.

The result of his marriage with Catherine Hand was ten children (seven sons and three daughters), namely,—Maria, Jacob, Peter, George, John, Susan Ann, Robert, William, Martha, David H., all of whom married and settled in their native county, except Robert, who located in Yates County, near Penn Yan, N. Y., married a Miss Baily and raised a large family.

George Lantz died August 27, 1847, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. A few years before his wife, Catharine, had died, in the seventy-third year of her age.

Jacob Lantz, the ancestor, and his three sons were in the Revolutionary War, Jacob at an early date and his sons at a later period. Adjutant-General Stryker's published reports and rosters of the soldiers from Sussex County, N. J., state that George and Peter Lantz served as privates, and a Sergeant Lantz, whose given name is not stated, is recorded in one of Paymaster Gaston's reports of the date of 1780.

George Lantz was drafted in the War of 1812, but peace being soon after declared, he saw no service.

In 1829, Peter Lantz, the father of the subject of this sketch, married Margaret, a daughter of David Demarest, a thrifty farmer residing in Frankford township (now Lafayette), Sussex County, N. J., about six miles northeast of Newton. On the death of Mr. Demarest, in 1825, his farm fell to two of his sons,—Cornelius and Gelliam,—afterward, by purchase, to Cornelius alone, and subsequently, at his death, to Joel C., who owns and now resides on the same.

The family name, which is spelled in three different ways,—"Demarest," "Demorest," "Demerest,"—is of Huguenot extraction. Parts of the family originally settled in New York and in Canada. During the War of 1812 they warmly espoused their respective sides of the contest. Friendly, and frequently exchanging visits, each side knew that his country was in the right. The family, in that war, gave a general to the Canadian army, and captains and lieutenants to the American army.

Peter, immediately after his marriage, settled on one of his father's farms and devoted his attention to farming. In due time he had born to him eight children,—seven sons and one daughter,—whose names were David A., Jackson, William H., John W., Martha Ann, George W., James W. and Peter W., all of whom lived to maturity, except William H., who died July 30, 1850, aged sixteen, and Martha Ann and Peter W., who died in infancy.

David W. settled in Hightstown, Mercer County, N. J.; John W. and James W. in Brooklyn, Iowa; and George W. in Waverly, N. Y. John W. and George W. each served three years in the Union army, in the late Rebellion.

Peter Lantz died in Hightstown, at the residence of his eldest son, David A., October 7, 1877, in his seventy-second year. His wife, Margaret, died at Lafayette, N. J., in 1867, in her fifty-eighth year.

The earlier years of Dr. Jackson Lantz were passed upon his father's farm, and his educational attainments were governed necessarily, to a great degree, by the facilities afforded at district schools. To the educational acquirements of his earlier days, however, he subsequently greatly added, by judicious private study and investigation. In August, 1885, he received a diploma from the Chautauqua, Literary and Scientific Circle, as a graduated member, having pursued the prescribed four years' course of study and passed a satisfactory examination, being the first graduate of Monroe County from that institution.

In 1850, in his nineteenth year, after learning the art of daguerreotyping, he purchased a complete establishment (the art of portrait-making by solar light having been but recently invented by the celebrated Frenchman, Daguerre), and commenced the duties of life by following the portrait-making business, which he continued for over two years, throughout the northern section of New Jersey and the contiguous territory of New York and Pennsylvania. During that time he also engaged in the study of dental science, under the direction of Dr. John J. Case (now of Newton, N. J.), and completed his course on plate-work with Drs. Wilcox and Sproull, of New York City. In September, 1852, having received a thorough preparatory training, he established himself as a practitioner of dentistry at Stroudsburg, Pa., where he has since enjoyed a large and successful practice. His work is of a general character, including all the branches of dental science and mechanical skill connected with the profession, of which he is an assiduous student, and in regard to the development of which he keeps himself thoroughly informed.

Since taking up his residence in Stroudsburg, Dr. Lantz has identified himself closely with the business interests of the place. In connection with Colonel Burnett and Thomas A. Bell, he assisted in organizing the Monroe Banking Company, in 1868, which, after a time, merged into the Monroe County Banking and Savings Company, and finally became, under new organization, the First National Bank of Stroudsburg. He is the largest owner of the stock of the Stroudsburg Street Railway Company, and is also largely interested in the affairs of the Van Fleet Fruit-Jar Company, he being half-owner of the patent. He is engaged extensively in blue-stone flagging, at Henryville, and owns two quarries at that place. He served as a member of the School Board of Stroudsburg, for seven years; is a member of the Stroudsburg Methodist Episcopal Church, with which he has also been officially connected; has been, for over twenty-five years, a faithful Sabbath-school teacher, and, one term, assistant superintendent. He is one of the trusted and esteemed residents of the place in which he has established his home. It was during his term of office as chief burgess that the lower part of the town, including a part of Main Street, was carried away by the freshet of 1869. To meet the contingency, the members of the Town Council became personally responsible for the payment of a portion of some fifteen thousand dollars of indebtedness, which was subsequently legalized by act of the Legislature and assumed by the town authorities, and the necessary repairs were thereby promptly undertaken and pushed to a speedy conclusion. In this instance, as well as in that of the flagging of the street-crossings, as well as in other public positions, the influence and executive skill of Dr. Lantz were strongly and favorably exerted. In addition to the offices already referred to, he served several years as borough auditor, six years as notary public and eleven years, consecutively, as secretary to Town Council.

Though born and bred a Democrat, the doctor was among the first to join the Republicans when the questions agitating the country led to the formation of that party, in 1856. He served several years as chairman of the County Republican Committee, and, as a member of the State Central Committee, was delegate on several occasions to State Conventions, and alternate to the National Convention in 1878.

Though most firmly believing in the principles of the Republican party, he could not resist the temptation, in 1872, to partly stray from the Republican fold, and stepping aside, worked and voted for the success to the Presidency of Horace Greeley, at whose feet, so to speak, the doctor had sat for more than twenty years, drinking in the political principles and policy as taught by the New York Tribune. But when that campaign was over, and Mr. Greeley so overwhelmingly defeated, the doctor's firmly-fixed principles led him straight back to the Republican camp.

He married, May 18, 1882, Susan E., daughter of the late William Angle, formerly of Sussex County, New Jersey, but finally of Smithfield, Pa., and stepdaughter of Nicholas Ruster, of Stroudsburg. Mrs. Lantz is a lady of culture and refinement, and received a diploma from the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle at the same time as her husband.

CHAPTER IV.

EDUCATION IN MONROE COUNTY.[1]

No records exist concerning the earliest schools of Monroe County. That there were schools within the region now comprising the county long prior to the Revolution seems altogether probable when one reflects that there were settlements along the Delaware River early in the eighteenth century, but no documentary proof of those primitive educational establishments remains, and no one has been able to fix an exact date of the building of a school-house prior to 1810. The earliest school of which any one appears to have any recollection, says Mr. Morey, was the one on Keever's Hill, in Stroud township, on the public road leading from Stroudsburg to the Wind Gap, and outside of the present borough limits. The citizens chiefly instrumental in building this school-house were Daniel Stroud, John Stroud and Mr. Hollinshead. It was a log structure, built after the model of the log houses of those days. The first teacher was a Mr. Curtis. He gave instruction only in the ordinary English branches. This was prior to the year 1800, but the exact date cannot be given. In the year mentioned, or possibly a little earlier or later, the school was moved to a stone building within the present borough limits, situated where Greene Street now is, on a lot adjoining the Friends' Meeting-House.

The first teachers in the borough of Stroudsburg were Nathaniel and Mary Waters. Mr. Gummere (the author of Gummere's Surveying), his brother-in-law, Mr. McVaugh, Dr. Herring and a number of others were teachers at either the old log school-house or the school held in the stone building.

At Hamilton Square, in Hamilton township, a school was in successful operation about the year 1800. The building in which it was held was also a log structure.

About the same time a school was organized in Middle Smithfield, under the direction of the Coolbaughs and Overfields, in an old log dwelling-house. Pupils came to this, as to the other early schools, from a distance of five or six miles.

In Chestnut Hill township, the first school-house was built at Pleasant Valley about 1810. It was a double house, and the teacher and his family lived in one-half, while the school was held in the other. The first teacher is said to have been one Katz. He was succeeded by Frederick Stiner or Sthiner, a native of Germany, who taught about fifteen years, and then gave place to Isaac Grover. Instruction was given both in English and German. Another school was established at Keller's Mills, about the same time as the one at Pleasant Valley.

By 1810 or 1812 there were several schools within the limits of what became, in 1815, the borough of Stroudsburg. In 1816 the main school was moved from the building, which stood in Greene Street, to one on the same street, on the opposite side of Main Street. For the building of this house four hundred dollars were appropriated by the State. The structure is still standing, though dilapidated and abandoned. It was used as the place for holding the principal school of the town, a "mixed" school until the academy was built, after which none but female pupils were received there. The Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist congregations worshipped in this building at various periods, before they secured other places of meeting.

The first school was organized in Pocono, about seventy years ago, in a spring-house, situated in Tannersville, near where the upper hotel now is. The teacher for a long term of years was John Anglemouyer.

In Jackson the first school-house was built in 1827, at Jackson Corners. John D. Frailey, who lived to be upwards of ninety years of age, was the first teacher here. Another house was built in 1829 at Singerville, and a school was held in it by John Possinger. In both of these schools German, as well as English, was employed as the medium of imparting instruction.

The first school in Ross township was a German school, taught by a Mr. Keener.

[1] In 1877, Mr. B. F. Morey contributed to the State School Commissioners' Report an outline of the educational development of Monroe County, and that contribution forms the greater part of the chapter here given.

"In all, or nearly all, of these early schools," says Mr. Morey, "instruction was imparted in but few branches, and in some cases it was thought sufficient for the girls if they learned to read. In the western part of the county the schools were either entirely taught in German, or at best in German and English. The schools were entirely supported by subscription, and sary for the pupils to travel a distance of four or five miles, owing to the fact that in a few districts the people live quite distant from one another. Although all the districts have not complied with the terms of the school law in the past, yet this year (1877) all will, I believe, have five months school." In 1884 the condition of the schools was as follows:

but very few poor children were returned. No schools were founded by churches, or in the interest of any denomination. The school term was in most cases but three months.

"Since 1844," continues the gentleman from whom we have quoted, "the growth of the school system in this county has not been as great as it should have been. Although all of the districts have accepted the terms of the act of Assembly, establishing common schools; yet, unless the State will give more aid to the poorer districts, the results, for some time to come, cannot be much greater. Some of the districts had no schools before this period, but now all the children of the county have school advantages. In some distant localities it is yet neces-

Concerning teachers, County School Superintendent A. A. Dinsmore, in his report for 1884, says,—

"Considered as a whole, the corps of teachers for this year has been the most satisfactory in my experience. There has been more zealous, earnest work, more inquiries after new and improved methods of instruction, and our teachers are becoming more generally interested in school literature, a majority of them being subscribers for weekly or monthly journals. We have one hundred and thirty-four teachers, of whom there are ninety-four males and forty females. Of the whole number, thirty-six had no previous experience, while but forty-five had taught more than five years. Our old teachers are steadily dropping out, but we are getting some excellent material in their places. The salaries were increased in some districts, but still they are so low that our teachers have little to prompt them to do good work, but a sense of duty and a desire to be useful."

Academies.—Under the provisions of an act, an academy was built at Stroudsburg many years ago to serve Monroe County as a higher educational institution. A dispute as to the part of the town in which the building should be located was turned to good advantage. Some of the citizens were in favor of building the academy on a hill on the north side of the town, while the rest were inclined to favor the level tract at the base of the hill. A vote for trustees was taken, each voter paying five dollars, and it resulted in favor of building on the hill, which was then called Academy Hill—a name which still clings to it. In this way funds were raised for building. Some of the citizens took such a deep interest in the success of their favorite location as to pay the required five dollars for such voters as were too poor to pay it for themselves. The amount furnished by the State was two thousand dollars, with which sum the building was erected.

Only one other academy was built in the county. In 1854 Rev. Mr. Howell, a Presbyterian minister, came to the Delaware Water Gap and succeeded in building a church there. He then conceived the idea of erecting an academy at that place, and with characteristic energy, at once went to work, and in 1855 opened a school in the finest school building then in the county. In 1862 he sold the building to Samuel Alsop (the author of several mathematical works), who conducted a school there for a short time—less than a year—and then converted the building into a hotel.

An effort was made by Mr. Schoedler, a German Reformed clergyman, to establish a Normal School at Brodheadsville in 1870. He proposed to call it the Wickersham German-English Normal School. His effort failed, but an institute, which he held there, resulted in much benefit to the teachers of the county. In 1874 another Normal School was projected, for which Stroudsburg and East Stroudsburg were proposed, in turn, as locations, but the period being an unpropitious one, this effort, like Mr. Schoedler's, failed.

The County Superintendency. — In 1854, after the law had been passed creating the office of county superintendent, an election was held, which resulted in Hon. Charlton Burnett's receiving a plurality vote. The law, however, required a majority vote to elect, and Mr. Burnett not having this, an appointment became necessary, whereupon Mr. Curtin, then Secretary of State, appointed to the office C. S. Detrich. He served eight and three-quarter years, resigning in 1862. Hon. J. B. Storm was appointed to fill the vacancy and served until 1869. In that year R. W. Swink was elected, but the election having been contested, Jere Fruttchey was appointed by state superintendent Wickersham. He served six years, and during that period the salary of the office was fixed at one thousand dollars per year. In 1875 B. F. Morey was elected and served until September, 1877, when he resigned to take charge of the Stroudsburg schools, and A. A. Dinsmore was appointed by the Superintendent of Public Instruction to fill the vacancy. He has held the office ever since and is the present incumbent. A curious fact concerning those who have filled the office in Monroe County is this: that all have been appointed at first except Mr. Morey.

CHAPTER V.

HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

Thirty-third Regiment (Fourth Reserve).—The companies comprising the Fourth Regiment were recruited, one from each of the counties of Chester, Monroe, Montgomery, Lycoming and Susquehanna. The companies were ordered to rendezvous at the camp at Easton. General McCall, who had been appointed to command the division, visited the camp on the 14th of June, and gave orders for its voluntary organization. The following field officers were elected for the Fourth Regiment: Robert G. March, colonel; John F. Gaul, lieutenant-colonel; and Robert M. McClure, major. The regiment was clothed and equipped at the camp near Easton in July. It was ordered to Harrisburg, encamping at Camp Curtin, where it remained until July 21, when, in compliance with orders from Washington, it moved to Baltimore and encamped at Carroll Hill, reporting to General Dix. A few days later it moved to Stewart's Mansion, on Baltimore Street, where it remained on duty until the last of August, when it was ordered to the general camp for the Reserves at Tenallytown. On the 1st of October, Colonel March resigned and was succeeded by Albert L. Magilton, lieutenant-colonel of the Second Reserves. Upon the organization of the division, the Fourth was assigned to the Second Brigade, commanded by General Meade. On the 9th of October the division broke camp at Tenallytown and encamped in line with the Army of the Potomac near Langley. In the brilliant little victory achieved at Dranesville on the 20th of December, the Second Brigade was held in reserve; but, upon the opening of the fight, marched rapidly to its support, arriving too late, however, to be engaged. In the general movement towards Manassas, in March, the Fourth moved to Hunter's Mills, returning to Alexandria, where it encamped and remained till ordered to Catlett's Station. Upon the departure of McClellan for the Peninsula, the Reserves, constituting a part of the First Corps, were ordered to concentrate at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg. They were then detached from McDowell's corps. They were ordered to proceed to White House, on the Pamunky, and form a junction with McClellan's army. The Fourth Regiment arrived at Mechanicsville, June 23d. On the 26th a severe battle was fought by the Reserves, on the line of Beaver Dam Creek, in which the enemy was repulsed with great slaughter. In this engagement the Fourth was held in reserve. The following day the rebel army, sixty thousand strong, attacked the single corps of Fitz-John Porter. In this engagement McCall's division was held in reserve until afternoon, when it was ordered in. The Fourth Regiment, commanded by Colonel Magilton, supported Duryea's Zouaves, and, driving the enemy from the woods, moved to the support of Colonel Sickel, whose regiment was engaged in a bloody and terrific contest. Before the Fourth could come up the Third had repulsed the enemy, and Colonel Magilton was ordered to the extreme left. Soon after going into action there his regiment was overwhelmed, driven back, and becoming detached, was forced to cross the Chickahominy to Smith's division to escape being captured.

Retiring from the Chickahominy, the Army of the Potomac wended its way toward the James. At Charles City Cross-Roads the Reserves were drawn up across the New Market road to resist any attack from the direction of Richmond. On the 30th of June, the enemy having massed its forces in their immediate fronts, attacked at half-past two P.M. The fourth was posted in the front line, on the right, in support of Randall's battery. Says General McCall, in his official report, "The most determined charge of the day was made upon Randall's battery by a full brigade with a wild recklessness that I never saw equaled. A somewhat similar charge had, as I have stated, been previously made on Cooper's and Kern's batteries by single regiments, without success, the rebels having been driven back with heavy loss. A like result appears to have been anticipated by Randall's company, and the Fourth Regiment (as was subsequently reported to me) was requested not to advance between the guns, as I had ordered, as it interfered with the cannoneers, but to let the battery deal with them.

"Its gallant commander did not doubt, I am satisfied, his ability to repel the attack, and his guns fairly opened lanes in the advancing host; but the enemy, unchecked, closed up his shattered ranks and came in. It was here," says McCall, "my fortune to witness, between those of my men who stood their ground and rebels who advanced, one of the fiercest bayonet fights that ever occurred upon this continent. I saw skulls crushed by the heavy blow of the butt of the musket, and, in short, the desperate thrusts and parries of a life and death encounter, proving, indeed, that Greek had met Greek, when the Alabama boy fell upon the son of Pennsylvania." The casualties in the Fourth Regiment, during the seven days of battle, were upwards of two hundred. From Malvern Hill the Reserves marched with the army to Harrison's Landing, until summoned to support Pope on the Rapidan. McCall having resigned, the command was given to General John F. Reynolds, under whom it marched to the plains of Manassas, and was engaged in the second battle of Bull Run. The loss in this to the Fourth was one killed and eleven wounded. The regiment next met the enemy at South Mountain. Colonel Magilton assumed command of the Second Brigade; Major Nyce, that of the regiment. The Fourth lost in this engagement five men killed and twenty-five wounded.

From South Mountain the Reserves moved through Boonsboro', and, crossing Antietam Creek, opened the battle on the evening of the 16th of September, where the Fourth was in advance. The Fourth lost in this engagement five killed, forty wounded and missing. In the battle of Fredericksburg, which was fought December 13th, the Fourth participated and held the right of the second line. The Fourth lost in this engagement two killed, thirty-four wounded and four missing. Among the wounded was Lieutenant-Colonel Woolworth, commanding the regiment. Soon after the battle of Fredericksburg, Colonel Magilton resigned, and Richard H. Woolworth, major of the Third Regiment, was promoted to fill the vacancy. On the 8th of July, 1863, the Reserves were ordered to the defences of Washington to rest and recruit. Here the Fourth remained until the 6th of January, 1864, when, in company with the Third, it was ordered to do duty in West Virginia. The Third was commanded by Major William Briner, the Fourth by Lieutenant-Colonel T. F. B. Tapper, the whole under Colonel Woolworth. The detachment performed picket duty from January 7th till the 28th. On the latter date it was ordered to take cars for transportation and was halted at New Creek. The exigency which called the Third and Fourth to this spot appeared to have passed, and they pitched their tents on the north branch of the Potomac. On the 10th of February the Third Regiment was transported to Martinsburg. The Fourth followed in a few days. In February the Fourth was moved to Kearneysville, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, to perform picket duty, until March 27th, when they were moved to Harper's Ferry, and performed picket duty at Harper's Ferry till April 3d. At that date the Third and Fourth were again sent westward to Grafton, two hundred miles from Harper's Ferry, and on the 22d of April started for Parkersburg, where they were transferred to steamboats down the Ohio to the mouth of the Great Kanawha, thence up the river to Brownstown. General George Crook had command of the troops concentrating in the Kanawha Valley. Immediately after landing at Brownstown, General Crook placed Colonel Sickel in command of the Third Brigade, composed of the Third and Fourth Reserves and the Eleventh and Fifteenth West Virginia Regiments. The Fourth was commanded by Colonel P. H. Woolworth. On Saturday morning, April 30th, the Third Brigade started from Brownstown and marched up Kanawha Valley. On the morning of May 2d, the command started from Great Falls for the village of Fayette, the extreme outpost held by the Union forces; the brigade of infantry and battery on duty there were added to General Crook's command. The design of the expedition was to strike the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad at Wytheville and Dublin, destroy it and thus co-operate with the Army of the Potomac, cutting the main artery which furnished supplies for Lee's army. On the 6th of May the advance had a lively skirmish with the Sixtieth Virginia, at Princetown. During the next two days the command made a forced march, crossed the East River Mountain, passed through Rocky Gap, and moved through Walker's Valley. On the 8th Shannon's bridge was gained. On the morning of the 9th the command passed through the Gap. When the summit was gained the position of the enemy was discovered, an engagement took place and resulted in the rout of the enemy. The loss in this engagement was one hundred and seven killed, five hundred wounded and twenty missing. The two Reserve regiments, numbering from five to six hundred, had from seventy-five to one hundred killed and wounded. Chaplain Pomeroy buried the remains of Colonel Woolworth, who fell mortally wounded at the head of his regiment, underneath a locust-tree, near by the stream over which the regiment charged. Captain Lenhart was wounded early in the engagement. On the morning of the 10th, General Crook's command pushed on across New River. New River was crossed on the night of the 10th at Pepper's Ferry. On the 11th the command marched in the rain during the day and reached Blacksburg in the afternoon. On the following day the march was pursued to the summit of Salt Pond Mountain. May 15, the command reached Union, county seat of Monroe County, and on the evening of the 16th, Greenbrier River. On the 19th of May the command halted at Beadow Bluff, in Fayette County. By the time it reached this point some of the men were suffering terribly from hunger, and no less than three hundred were without soles to their shoes. On May 22d, General Sickel's brigade was ordered to Millville, near Louisburg. While here, their term of service having expired, the Third and Fourth Regiments received orders to return to Pennsylvania, to be mustered out. Arriving at Philadelphia on Wednesday, June 8th, they were mustered out of service, the Fourth on the 17th of June.

THIRTY-THIRD REGIMENT (Fourth Reserves), COMPANY F.—This company was mustered in June 11, 1861, and mustered out June 17, 1864.

SIXTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.—On the 27th of July, 1861, John F. Staunton, of Philadelphia, received authority from the Secretary of War to recruit a regiment. A camp was established at Camac's Woods, near the city, and recruiting was immediately commenced in various parts of the State. The first company was raised in Carbon County, and was mustered into the service on the 28th of August. Owing to the belief that widely prevailed that no more troops would be needed, the progress was slow, and the companies were not all in camp and the organization perfected until the spring of 1862. The men were principally recruited from the counties of Monroe, Carbon, Wayne, Jefferson, Schuylkill, Indiana, Westmoreland, Luzerne, Northampton and Philadelphia.

The field and staff officers were John F. Staunton, colonel; Horace B. Burnham, lieutenant-colonel; Harry White, major; John F. Young, adjutant; Thomas P. Parker, quartermaster; Robert Barr, surgeon; James W. Pettinos, assistant surgeon; Edward C. Ambler, chaplain. Thomas F. Corson subsequently joined as assistant surgeon. On the 3d of April, 1862, the regiment moved by rail to Baltimore, and thence to Annapolis, Md., where it relieved the Eleventh Pennsylvania. It was employed in guarding the Branch Railroad, in performing provost guard duty in the city, and special duties in different parts of Eastern Maryland. In February, 1863, the Sixty-seventh, numbering nine hundred men, proceeded to Harper's Ferry, doing guard duty for a few weeks. It was then transferred to Berryville, where it formed the Third Brigade of General Milroy's command. The headquarters was at Winchester, and the force under him was charged with holding the rebels in check and protecting the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. "Late in March," says Milroy, in his official report, "in pursuance of an order issued upon my own suggestion, I stationed the Third Brigade of my division, consisting of the Sixth Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, First Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry and the Baltimore Battery, at Berryville, Colonel McReynolds, of the First New York Cavalry, commanding. My instructions to Colonel McReynolds were to keep open our communications with Harper's Ferry, and to watch the passes of the Blue Ridge, with the exception of expeditions across the Shenandoah for the purpose of breaking up the haunts of Mosby's men. Little of note occurred while here.

"On the evening of Friday, the 12th of June, Colonel Staunton, who had been at Winchester, returned with the intelligence that the enemy in large force was moving down the valley, and was then but a few miles distant. Orders were soon received from General Milroy to hold the command in readiness to retire at a concerted signal, and reinforce him at Winchester. On Saturday morning, at a few minutes before eight o'clock, the cavalry patrol on the Front Royal road reported the enemy advancing in force.

"Deeming it advisable to unite the command as speedily as possible, the signal was given for Colonel McReynolds to move. As his vanguard left the town, the advance of the enemy appeared in sight. After a long and fatiguing march the command reached Winchester at ten P.M. The tired troops had scarcely thrown themselves on the wet ground for rest, when they were again put in motion. The Sixty-seventh was, at daylight of Sunday, ordered into the rifle-pits encircling the Star Fort, a mile and a half north of Winchester.

"There are three ranges of hills on the north of Winchester. The first range was occupied by three forts. The Star Fort was intermediate, and was held by the Third Brigade, under Colonel McReynolds. During Sunday, long masses of the enemy were seen moving northward, and it was apparent to all that it was a part of the main body of the enemy, and before evening the small command of General Milroy would be completely surrounded. General Lee having quietly broken camp upon the Rappahannock, the isolated command of General Milroy was the first obstacle he encountered. About four o'clock the enemy opened upon the two principal forts. At a council of war during the night it was decided to evacuate. At a little before noon, when only four miles from Winchester, a large body of the enemy was encountered, which immediately opened a heavy fire. Again and again the troops, led by General Milroy in person, charged his well-supported guns, and succeeded in capturing some of his pieces, but were not able to hold them; with fresh troops, in overpowering numbers, he drove back our forces, rendering any attempts to break his line futile. At the opening of the engagement the Sixty-seventh and Sixth Maryland were deployed to the right. Scarcely had they advanced three-quarters of a mile in this direction, when they found themselves in the very midst of the enemy. A severe engagement ensued, in which the little force made a gallant but hopeless defence. The Sixty-seventh, which was in the advance, finding itself completely overpowered, and surrounded on all sides by masses of the enemy, was obliged to give up the contest and surrender. The fragment of the Sixty-seventh which escaped capture was reorganized at Harper's Ferry, and, with the rest of Milroy's command, was formed in two brigades, which subsequently became the Third Division of the Third Corps. The regiment, with this division, was engaged in fortifying Maryland Heights until the 30th of June, when, the works having been dismantled, the ordnance and stores were shipped to Washington, General Elliott's brigade, to which the Sixty-seventh belonged, acting as a guard. It arrived on the 4th. From Washington the division joined the Army of the Potomac at Fredericksburg. In the campaign which followed, during the fall and winter of 1863, the regiment shared the fortunes of the Third Corps. During the winter a large portion of the men re-enlisted, but so many had originally joined the regiment at a late date that there were not a sufficient number eligible to re-enlistment to entitle it to a veteran furlough. General Meade, however, in consideration of the fact that nearly all who were eligible had done so, permitted the veterans to be furloughed in a body, and to take their arms with them. The remainder of the regiment, consisting of about two hundred men, being left without officers, was temporarily attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Pennsylvania. The veterans, numbering three hundred and fifty, accompanied by their officers, departed for Philadelphia. At the expiration of the thirty days' furlough they returned to Washington, and were ordered to report to General Abercrombie, at Belle Plain. Colonel Staunton was then placed in command of a regiment of cavalry and a battery, in addition to his own, and directed to proceed to the White House, where he arrived early in June, and the Sixty-seventh was retained for duty at this post.

In the operations of the army under General Wright, which lasted during the summer, through Northern Virginia and Maryland, the regiment participated. In the early part of September, Colonel Staunton and Captain Berry being now out of service, and Lieutenant-Colonel Burnham having been discharged at the expiration of his term, to accept the rank of major in the regular army, the command of the regiment devolved upon Adjutant John F. Young. From the 15th of June, 1864, the regiment was with Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley campaign until the close of the year, when, with the corps, it was ordered to rejoin the army in front of Petersburg in the subsequent operations of the corps, including the final campaign, which ended at Appomattox Court-House on the 19th of April, 1865. After the surrender of Lee the regiment marched with a part of the army to Danville, near the North Carolina border, where Johnson was still in command of a large rebel force. After his capitulation it returned to the neighborhood of Washington, and on the 14th of July, 1865, was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND REGIMENT.—The One Hundred and Forty-second Regiment was made up of three companies from Somerset County, and one from each of the counties of Westmoreland, Mercer, Monroe, Venango, Luzerne, Fayette and Union, the last-named being Company E, of which the original commanding officer was Captain John A. Owens.

The regimental rendezvous was at Camp Curtin, Harrisburg, where the companies were mustered into the service as they arrived during the month of August, 1862. On the 1st of September the organization of the regiment was effected, under the following-named field officers: Colonel, Robert P. Cummings, of Somerset County; Lieutenant-Colonel, Alfred M. McCalmont, of Venango; Major, John Bradley, of Luzerne. Within two days from the time the organization was completed the regiment moved to Washington, D. C., where it was first employed in the construction of fortifications for the defense of the city. In the latter part of September it was moved to Frederick, Md., where it remained a few weeks, and early in October it marched to Warrenton, Va., it having been assigned to duty in the Second Brigade, Third Division (the Pennsylvania Reserves) of the First Corps. From Warrenton it moved to Brooks' Station, on the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad.

The men of the regiment first smelt the smoke of battle at Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December. The Reserve Division formed a part of General Franklin's grand division, and at noon on the 12th crossed the Rappahannock, and took up a position for the night along the river-bank. Early on the following morning the division crossed the ravine which cuts the plain nearly parallel with the river, and formed in line of battle. The One Hundred and Forty-second Regiment was deployed on the left of the division, supporting a battery. Finally the order was given to charge, and the regiment went forward with a cheer, but was met by a fusilade so deadly that its advance was checked. "Exposed to a destructive fire, from which the rest of the brigade was shielded, it could only await destruction, without the privilege of returning it, and with no prospect of gaining an advantage; but with a nerve which veterans might envy, it heroically maintained its position till ordered to retire. Out of five hundred and fifty men who stood in well-ordered ranks in the morning, two hundred and fifty in one brief hour were stricken down. After this disastrous charge the division fell back to the position west of the ravine which it had occupied on the previous day, where it remained until, with the army, it crossed the river on the night of the 15th, and two days after went into winter-quarters near Belle Plain Landing."[1]

In February, 1863, the regiment, with the Reserves, were sent to the defence of Washington, and remained there till late in April, when it again moved to the Rappahannock. During the progress of the great battle of Chancellorsville, which occurred a few days later, it was held in readiness for service, and remained for many hours under a heavy artillery fire, but did not become actually engaged. After the battle it recrossed the river with the army, and reoccupied its old camp near the Rappahannock until the advance of the army to Gettysburg. In that great conflict the regiment fought with conspicuous bravery on the 1st and 3d of July, not being called into action, but held in reserve during the struggle of the 2d. Its losses in the entire battle were one hundred and forty-one killed and wounded and eighty-four missing (most of whom were made prisoners)—a total of two hundred and twenty-five. Among the wounded were Colonel Cummins and Captain Charles R. Evans, of the Union County company, and Lieutenant Andrew G. Tucker, of the same company, the wounds of the colonel and Lieutenant Tucker both proving to be mortal.

During the remainder of the year 1863 the regiment took part in the general movements of the army (including the advance against the enemy's strong position at Mine Run), but was not actively engaged in battle. Its winter-quarters were made near Culpeper, Va.

On the 4th of May, 1864, it left its winter-quarters and moved across the Rapidan on the campaign of the Wilderness. At noon on the 5th it became hotly engaged, and fought with determination, holding its ground stubbornly until near night, when it was forced to retire. Its losses were heavy. On the 6th it again saw heavy fighting along the line of the Gordonsville road. On the 7th it moved to Laurel Hill, and held position there until the 13th, when it moved to Spottsylvania Court-House. There it remained a week, throwing up defenses, and a great part of the time under heavy artillery fire. On the 21st it again moved on, and in its advance southward fought at North Anna, Bethesda Church and Tolopotomoy, arriving at Cold Harbor on the 6th of June. Moving thence across the Chickahominy to the James, it crossed that river on the 16th and took position in front of Petersburg. Its first fight there was on the 18th, on which occasion it succeeded in dislodging the enemy in its front, and held the ground thus gained. It took part in two actions on the line of the Weldon Railroad, also in that at Peebles' Farm (September 30th), and others during the operations of the summer and fall. On the 6th of February, 1865, it fought and suffered considerable loss in the action of Dabney's Mills.

Breaking its winter camp on the 30th of March, it participated in the assault on the enemy's works on the Boydton plank-road, and again fought at Five Forks on the 1st of April, suffering severe loss. Eight days later General Lee surrendered at Appomattox, and the brigade of which the One Hundred and Forty-second formed a part moved to Burkesville Station as a guard to stores and other property captured from the enemy. After a stay of two weeks at Burkesville the regiment was ordered to Petersburg, and moving thence by way of Richmond to Washington, D. C., was there mustered out of service on the 29th of May, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-SIXTH REGIMENT, NINE MONTHS' SERVICE (Drafted Militia).—Of this regiment several companies were from Lehigh County and the remaining three from Monroe. They rendezvoused at Philadelphia in November, 1862, and a regimental organization was effected with the following field officers: Ambrose A. Lechter, colonel; George Peekington, lieutenant-colonel; Wm. Schoonover, major. Soon after its organization the regiment was sent to Norfolk, Va., where for a month it was subjected to careful instruction and discipline. The regiment was selected to accompany General Foster in his expedition for the reinforcement of the army operating upon the defences of Charleston. Proceeding to Newbern, N. C., it was incorporated with Foster's forces, and on the 27th of January, 1863, set sail, arriving at Hilton Head on the 5th of February. While in the Department of the South the regiment was not engaged in any hostile operations, but was principally employed in fatigue duty upon the fortification and in provost duty. Soon after the expiration of its term of duty it returned North and was sent to Philadelphia, where, on the 17th and 18th of August, it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT (one year's service).—The regiment was recruited in Philadelphia, under the direction of the Union League Association, during the summer of 1864. Recruiting was commenced soon after the muster out of service of the Reserve Corps, and Horatio G. Sickle, who had command of the Third Reserve Regiment, was selected, in conjunction with James H. Orne, chairman of the executive committee, to superintend the work of filling the ranks and organizing the command. On the 9th of September the organization was completed, with the following field officers: Horatio G. Sickle, colonel; John B. Murray, lieutenant-colonel; Edwin A. Glenn, major. On the 19th, the regiment proceeded to join the army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg, Va., and upon its arrival was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division of the Fifth Corps, and joined it at a point on the Weldon Railroad. Soon after its arrival Colonel Sickle was placed in command of the brigade and Lieutenant-Colonel Murray succeeded to the command of the regiment. At the battle of Peebles' Farm, which opened on the 30th, the regiment participated, and in the engagement which occurred on October 2d the regiment suffered a loss of one killed and five wounded. On the 27th it moved with the corps for a demonstration upon the South Side Railroad. On the 6th of December it was engaged with the corps in the destruction of the Weldon Railroad. Lieutenant-Colonel Murray was relieved on account of physical disability on the 27th of December, and the command devolved on Major Glenn. The next engagement participated in by the regiment was at Hatcher's Run, February 6 and 7, 1865, resulting in a loss to the regiment of three killed and thirteen wounded. In the action known as the battle of Lewis' Farm, on March 25, 1865, the regiment sustained grievous losses. Major Charles I. Maceuen and Captain George W. Mulfrey were killed; General Sickle, Captains Samuel Wrigley, Benjamin F. Gardner and Thomas C. Spokeman, Lieutenants Jeremiah C. Keller and William E. Miller wounded. The entire loss was three hundred and eleven; twenty-eight were killed. On the morning of the 31st it again moved off and met the enemy at White Oak Swamp, and in the engagement that followed sustained a loss of six killed and forty-six wounded. Soon after the conclusion of the battle the regiment moved towards Five Forks, joining with Sheridan's cavalry, and in the engagement which followed suffered the loss of their commander, Major Glenn. The loss to the regiment was one killed and fifteen wounded. On the 15th of May the regiment commenced its march homeward and remained at Arlington Heights until June 3d, when it was mustered out.

Michael M. Kistler.—Michael M., son of Michael and Magdalena (Brobst) Kistler, was born on the homestead, in Lynn township, Lehigh County, April 14, 1833. At the age of fifteen he began learning the trade of a tanner with his brother Joel, in his tanneries at Kistler's Valley and at Ringtown, Schuylkill County, where he remained for six years, receiving therefor his board, clothes and one year's schooling. He had formed the acquaintance, while at Ringtown, of Miss Catherine Rumbel, a daughter of John and Margaret (Andrews) Rumbel, whom he married upon reaching his majority. She was born in 1823, and her parents both died where they resided. Their children are Albert Franklin, a cigar manufacturer at East Stroudsburg; Mary Maranda (1858–82) was the wife of Sylvanus Warner, of the same place; Hiram Wilson, a lumber merchant of East Stroudsburg; Lucy Elmira, Stephen Bird and Lillie Irene Kistler.

After his marriage he started a small tannery at Ringtown, which he successfully carried on for six years, when, loyal to his country's demand for men to preserve the Union, he relinquished his business and went to the front. In the summer of 1861, upon the first call for three years' men, a company was formed at Ringtown on the condition that Michael M. Kistler would command it. The matter being presented to him, he finally accepted and took ten days to prepare for his departure and close up his business. Upon reaching Harrisburg, he, however, declined the honor of the captaincy of the company, but accepted, upon its completion, the position of second lieutenant.

The company became a part of the Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Company I, and left Harrisburg for Fortress Monroe on August 20th ; thence to Hatteras Island, N. C., where the regiment joined Burnside's fleet, and proceeded to Roanoke Island, where they took the fort and captured some three thousand prisoners on February 14, 1862, destroying the rebel gun-boats. Thence the fleet went to Newbern, N. C., and stormed successfully the rebel breast-works on the Neuse River, capturing, on March 14, 1862, four thousand prisoners and sixty-eight cannons ; thence to Fort Macon, N. C., where, after two weeks' battering, they took the fortress, which surrendered with one thousand five hundred men. Thence the army proceeded to reinforce General McClellan's army on the Peninsula, but arriving too late for action, proceeded via Aquia Creek and Fredericksburg, Va., and formed the advance of McClellan's army in affording protection to Washington. While at Fredericksburg Mr. Kistler, for meritorious services, was promoted to first lieutenant. This threatening danger now being evaded, the army had a skirmish with the enemy at Slaughter Mountain, whence it proceeded to Kelly's Ford, on the north side of the Rappahannock, where for two weeks the Union men remained constantly on the alert, and were engaged in numerous skirmishes with the rebels, who were on the other side of the river. This led to the second battle of Bull Run, which was fought by the army under General Reno, August 28, 29 and 30, 1862. Lieutenant Kistler received a bullet through his coat collar and had his sabre scabbard knocked off. On September 1st, following, General Reno and his brave army fought the battle of Chantilly, where the brave and daring Generals Kearny and Stevens fell. On September 14th the army under General McClellan, with General Burnside commanding the left wing, fought the battle of South Mountain, where General Reno was killed, and on the 17th the memorable battle of Antietam, by Generals McClellan and Burnside, was fought. At this latter engagement Lieutenant Kistler received a bullet wound, the ball entering by his shoulder strap, passed through his right lung and lodged near the back-bone under his shoulder-blade, where most of it remains at the writing of this sketch, in 1886. After four months' leave of absence he returned to his regiment at Fredericksburg; thence proceeded with it to Lexington, Ky., when, by the advice of Dr. Carpenter, of Pottsville, Pa., then superintendent of the hospitals in the Ohio Department, he accepted the position of military aid to the Medical Department of Dennison, United States Army General Hospital at Camp Dennison, Ohio, whither he went and remained until April, 1866. At this camp he had charge of the quartermaster, commissary and ordnance departments, and also of the sick, wounded, muster, pay and descriptive rolls. On October 1, 1863, he was mustered as commanding officer of the First Company, Second Battalion, in the Ohio Department of the Veteran Reserve Corps, stationed at the same camp. To this latter position he was appointed by Secretary of War Stanton and received his commission from President Lincoln. In April, 1866, he was ordered to proceed to his home and await further orders, and on June 30th, following, he was mustered out, as his services were no longer needed.

M. M. Kistler

In 1867 he established himself in mercantile business with his brother, Stephen, at Bartonsville, Monroe County, Pa., and after three years opened another store at Tannersville. They continued the two for ten years thereafter, besides adding to their business the manufacture of shoe-pegs, clothes-pins and chair stock at Tompkinsville. In 1872 he purchased a lot on the corner of Washington and Cortland Streets, in East Stroudsburg, and the following year built thereon the fine four-story "Kistler Block." In 1878 he removed to East Stroudsburg, where he built his present brick residence in 1883, on Cortland Street, corner of Alley "C." Upon the death of his brother Stephen, in 1880, the partnership was dissolved, their common property divided, and he retired from active business except to oversee his farm in Tunkhannock township and take care of his other property. Lieutenant Kiestler's life has been an active one, and withal his integrity of purpose in life's work, and his accumulation of a competency, his pride still lingers in the great honor of fighting for the preservation of the Union, and in his sacrifice for his country when in its greatest peril. Both himself and wife and the older members of his family are members of the Lutheran Church.

His father, Michael (1796–1880), was a resident of Kistler's Valley, Lehigh County, was a farmer and tanner, and both himself and wife, Magdelena Brobst (1801–81), were buried at Jerusalem Church. Their children are Stephen, a man of large business capacity, a tanner, merchant and large real-estate owner, died in 1880; Parry, a farmer in Lehigh County; Sarah is the wife of Stephen Snyder, of Perryville, Carbon County; Jacob, a retired farmer of Lehigh County; Joel, a tanner and farmer in Lehigh and Schuylkill Counties, died in 1884; Polly married Eli Sechler, of Lehigh County, and died about 1856; Mary, wife of Charles Foust, of Albany township, Berks County; Daniel, of West Penn, Schuylkill County, farmer and tanner; William, a grocer of Stroudsburg; Michael M., subject of this sketch; Angeline, wife of Peter Seip, of Weisenberg township, Lehigh County; and Catherine, who married a Mr. Brobst, and died in 1858.

His grandfather, Jacob Kistler, settled on the old homestead in Kistler's Valley, where he reared an interesting family of children, Philip, Jacob, Daniel, Michael (father of our subject), Solomon, Catherine and Magdalena. His great-grandfather was George Kistler, who, among a number of Palatinates or Swiss, moved, between 1735 and 1745, from Falkner Swamp and Goshenhoppen (present Montgomery County, Pa.) up to Lynn township, and settled in the vicinity of what is now Jerusalem Church, formerly called Allemangel Church, Lehigh County. He was elder of this church about 1755 to 1768. The names of his children were George Kistler, Jr., who afterwards resided near Kutztown; Jacob Kistler, grandfather of our subject; John Kistler; Samuel Kistler; Philip Kistler; Michael Kistler; Barbara married first a Brobst and afterward Michael Mosser, of Lowhill; Dorotea married Michael Reinhart; and Elizabeth married a Keller, near Hamburg, Pa.

CHAPTER VI.

RAILROADS.

THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN RAILROAD was the earliest, and is yet the principal, thoroughfare of steam travel in Monroe County. It had a very early inception, and Henry Drinker, a strong and prominent character in the herculean pioneer projects of Northeastern Pennsylvania, was the originator of this great line of traffic which built up the city of Scranton, and in the territory which is the especial province of this volume gave rise to many minor improvements brought into existence thriving East Stroudsburg and gave an outlet to New York.

The original Drinker family were old Quakers prominent in Philadelphia. Soon after the Revolutionary War Henry Drinker, the great-grandfather of Joe, was interested, with Benjamin Rush, George Clymer, Samuel Meredith, Robert Morris and others, in the purchase of Pennsylvania wild lands. This portion of the State was then an entire wilderness, and in 1789–91 Henry Drinker purchased from the State twenty-five thousand acres of land in what are now the counties of Lackawanna, Wayne, Pike and Susquehanna. A great portion of this land was on the head-waters of the Lehigh River, in the first-named county, then a part of Luzerne.

To open this isolated settlement to the outside world and make the region accessible, Henry built, in 1819, the first turnpike road into the Lackawanna Valley. This he had chartered as the Philadelphia and Great Bend turnpike. It was sixty miles long and extended from Stanhope, N. J., to Drinker's Beach. It is known as the "Old Drinker road" to this day, and is a landmark in fixing boundary lines.

In 1819, also, Drinker became aware of the presence of anthracite coal in the valley, and, although it was then comparatively valueless, efforts to introduce it having, up to that time, met with little success, he believed in its actual importance, and foresaw the advantages of a better communication between the Delaware and Susquehanna Valleys. His idea was a railroad, although there was not one in existence in the world at that time, except the crude English mine tramways. Drinker blazed with an axe a route from the mouth of the Lackawanna, now Pittston, through the unbroken forest, across the lofty Pocono Mountains to the Water Gap, a distance of sixty miles, and satisfied himself that such a scheme as he proposed was feasible. In 1826 he obtained a charter from the Pennsylvania Legislature for the Susquehanna Canal and Railroad Company. The commissioners appointed by the act were Henry W. Drinker, William Henry, Jacob D. Stroud, Daniel Stroud, A. E. Brown, S. Stokes, James N. Porter and John Coolbaugh.

Drinker's idea was a railroad with incline planes or a canal, horse-power to be used if a railroad, between the planes, and water-power to raise the cars upon the planes. He interested a number of prominent men in his project and in 1831 a survey of the route was made. The engineer employed, Major Ephraim Beach, reported that the road could be built for six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

After considerable work, Henry Drinker induced George and Seldon Scranton, of Oxford, N. J., to become partners in the scheme, associating them with the project, after inducing the Morris Canal Company to take one hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of stock, a road known as the Lackawanna and Western Railroad was built from Scranton to Great Bend, by the Scrantons, Drinker dropping out on account of severe losses which he had sustained in opening up the country with roads, and endeavoring to develop the coal and iron resources so abundant in that region.[1] This was completed in 1851. Until that time all travel to New York had been by stages to Middletown, N. Y., or across Wayne County to Narrowsburg, N. Y., where connection was made with the Erie. The journey required two days. The completion of the Lackawanna and Western reduced the time to one day, although the journey was twice as long. This was an outlet formed by groping blindly among the hills in the wrong direction, and apparently diverging towards Great Bend, sixty miles away, before starting for New York.

[1] Henry W. Drinker, by the sale of his lands, which increased in value with the advent of the railroad and the

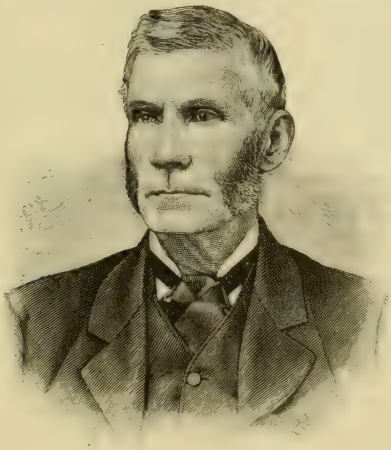
A practical movement was made in the right direction in 1849, when, chiefly through the influence of the Scrantons, a company was chartered to run a road from the Delaware Water Gap to some point on the Lackawanna, near Cobb's Gap, called "The Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad Company." The commissioners named in the act and invested with authority to effect an organization were Moses W. Coolbaugh, S. W. Shoemaker, Thomas Grattan, H. M. La Bar, A. Overfield, I. Place, Benj. V. Rush, Alpheus Hollister, Samuel Taylor, F. Starbird, Jas. H. Stroud, R. Bingham and W. Nyce. It will be noticed from this list of names that the people of Monroe had an active hand in promoting this enterprise. It was at Stroudsburg, at Jacob Knecht's, that the first meeting of the commissioners was held, November 28, 1850, and the first meeting of the stockholders was held at the same place at the house of Stroud J. Hollinshead, December 26, 1850. They chose Colonel George W. Scranton, a man in whom the people had entire confidence, president of the company. He had been the owner of the original charter of the old Drinker Railroad, and this the company purchased of him for one thousand dollars, in 1853. A joint application was then immediately made by the Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad Company and the Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, for an act of the Legislature consolidating them, and such an act was passed March 11, 1853. Thus was consummated a union under the present name of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and a solution of the problem of connecting Scranton and its coal mines with the New York market was assured. Colonel Scranton was elected as president of the consolidated company, and long continued by repeated re-elections to hold that responsible office.

Measures were immediately adopted to construct the road from Scranton to the Delaware River, at a point five miles below the Water Gap. The necessary surveys had been previously made by E. McNeill, chief engineer of the company, who, by indefatigable labor, had procured crestline and other preliminary surveys, which enabled him to establish a favorable line with easy grades, practicable for a heavy traffic over the barren heights and perplexing undulations of the Pocono.

Books were opened for subscriptions to increase the capital stock, which had at the time of the consolidation amounted to $1,441,000, and such was the confidence felt in the success of the enterprise, not only by the original stockholders, but by other capitalists, that the whole sum required, $1,500,000, was obtained in a few days.



The contract for the construction of the Southern Division—the original Delaware and Cobb's Gap Railroad—was put under way in June, 1853. As heretofore explained, this section, sixty-one miles in length, extended from Scranton, through Cobb's Gap, and so on in a general southeasterly direction, through the western part of Luzerne (now Lackawanna) County and across the county of Monroe, through the Delaware Water Gap, to a point on the river five miles below, where it connected with the Warren Railroad of New Jersey. Going by this railroad nineteen miles to New Hampton Summit, and there making connection by the Central Railroad of New Jersey with Jersey City, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company found a market for the product of the extensive coal-fields of which it had become possessed, and a few years later the relations between the Lackawanna Valley and the sea-board were rendered still more intimate by the leasing of the Morris and Essex Railroad.

development of the coal trade, died October 15, 1866, leaving a large fortune.

ISAAC TRISBAUGH PUTERBAUGH, who for over forty years has been identified with the management of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and officially connected therewith, was born in Nescopeck township, Luzerne County, Pa., December 22, 1822. His early opportunities for book knowledge were very limited, and confined to the district school. At the age of ten years he went to live with his brother, Samuel H., a miller, at Pittston, Pa., and remained with him there and at Mehoopany for three years, which was followed by one year's service on the farm of Bishop Jennings. Going to Wilkes-Barre, he apprenticed himself to Hugh Fell, a wheelwright, for three years, and upon the death of Mr. Fell, carried on the business on his own account for two years thereafter in the same shop, and for some time afterwards in a shop built by himself.

While in Wilkes-Barre he formed the acquaintance of Miss Elizabeth George, a daughter of Henry and Catherine George, of Nanticoke, Luzerne County, Pa., whom he married in 1843. The result of this union was one son, Harrison S. Puterbaugh, a conductor on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad since 1871, and who married May Lungar, of New Hampton, N. J., and one daughter, Alice, who died at the age of four years.

Soon after his marriage Mr. Puterbaugh removed to Scranton, then a small hamlet of a few houses, at the time of the construction of the Northern Division of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. There he entered the employ of the company, and at first engaged in building cars to be run on the road, and subsequently served as conductor on coal, passenger and other trains until 1865. For one year he had taken up his residence at Great Bend, where the death of both his wife and young daughter occurred. In 1865 he removed to East Stroudsburg, then a part of Stroud township, where he has continued his official relations with the company, and acted as dispatcher of trains, looking after wreckages and employees, and after the general business of that division of the road. His identification with the workings of the road since its construction has made his name familiar all along the line, and wherever known, his integrity of purpose, his conscientious regard for the rights of others and his sound judgment and discretion in the management of men have gained for him the confidence and favorable opinion of all.

Since his residence at East Stroudsburg he has been closely identified with the growth and prosperity of the place, and a contributor to its various interests. Upon the erection of the borough of East Stroudsburg, in 1871, he was chosen its first chief burgess on the Democratic ticket, and by re-election served in that capacity for two years. He has served also as auditor and school director of the borough for several terms. Very soon after settling at East Stroudsburg, Mr. Puterbaugh bought the property where the Lackawanna House now stands, on Crystal Street, and subsequently furnished the means to build the present hotel, and built the house occupied by Dr. Lewis Bush, adjoining the hotel. On the corner of Cortland and Starbird Streets he erected the residence now occupied by A. C. Loder, ticket agent at East Stroudsburg, and in 1882 he erected the residence of his son on Cortland Street. He is one of the charter members of the First National Bank of Stroudsburg and was for some time one of its directors, and he is the treasurer of the fund for the erection of the silk manufactory at East Stroudsburg, in process of construction in 1886. His father, George Puterbaugh, was a farmer in Nescopeck township, and died in Dallas township, in the same county, at the advanced age of over four-score years. His mother, Effie Henry, was a native of New England, and removed with her parents to Nescopeck township. She died about two years before her husband. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church. Their children were Andrew, George, John, Joseph, Samuel H., Isaac T. (the subject of this sketch), Margaret and Elizabeth. Of these, only Isaac T. Puterbaugh survives in 1886. The family is of German origin.

CHAPTER VII.

TOPOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY.

The first thing to be noticed in Monroe County topography is the uniformity of its mountain, and consequent drainage systems.

However, to the eye of the mere landscape hunter, as he surveys, from some height, a wild diversity of hill and vale, of jutting crags and unexpected "knobs," of billowy ridges, scattering lakes and meandering streams, there appears rather a class of natural beauty, than any suggestion of order, or of methodical arrangement; nevertheless, to the more patent and analytical investigation of the student of nature, the leading topographical features of the county will present themselves as parts of one harmonious design.

Traversing the county in a northeast and southwest direction run three, and, in the west end of the county, four, parallel ranges of mountains, or hills, and these determine the courses of the numerous creeks and rivers of the county.

First, on the north, we have the high tablelands of the Pocono Plateau, elevated above tide-water from one thousand five hundred to two thousand feet, and along which, and back from the southern escarpment ten or twelve miles, runs the northern boundary line of the county.

South from the precipitous southern escarpment of the mountain a rolling plain extends six to eight miles, to Godfrey's Ridge in the east and to Wire Ridge in the west end of the county. This rolling country lies at an elevation above tide of from one thousand to four hundred feet, the decline being gradual from the north to the south.

We now come to the second notable elevation in Monroe County topography—Godfrey's Ridge, otherwise known geographically as Walpack Ridge, and also known locally as Fox Hill, Chestnut Hill Mountain and Dodendorf Mountain, the last two names being applied in Ross and Eldred townships to detached elevations which are really continuations of the same ridge. The next important range south is the Blue, or Kittatinny Mountain, along the crest of which, for about twenty miles, runs a portion of the southern line of the county. The fourth elevation above referred to as giving character to the drainage is Wire Ridge, extending in a westerly or southwesterly direction from the west line of Hamilton township, and bisecting the western extension of the Stroudsburg Valley.

From the numerous springs, or spring-fed ponds upon the Pocono Plateau, or its southern slope, most of the streams that traverse the county, and ultimately find an outlet, either through the Delaware Water Gap or the Lehigh Gap, have their rise. These streams, commencing at the eastern or Pike County line, and naming them in their order, are:

Big Bushkill, which in the lower portion of its course forms the boundary between Monroe and Pike Counties, Marshall's Creek, Brodhead's Creek, Pocono Creek and McMichael's Creek. All of these rise in the Pocono region, and pursuing a general course of south to southeast, empty, either directly or indirectly, into the Delaware River, which, from the eastern line of the county to the Delaware Water Gap, flows along the northern foot of the Blue Mountain, and forms the remaining portion of the southern boundary of the county. The Pocono Creek empties into McMichael's Creek, and McMichael's into Brodhead's Creek at Stroudsburg, and all of the streams above mentioned, in their course from the Pocono Mountain to the Delaware River, cut through the hard rocks of the intervening ridges, forming thus those wild gorges and magnificent cataracts and cascades which have been the wonder and delight of many generations, both civilized and uncivilized.

Cherry Creek and Aquanchicola Creek lead a more quiet life, and have a less romatic history. They head near together in the neighborhood of the Wind Gap, and flow in opposite directions along the narrow valley which lies between Godfrey's Ridge and the Blue Mountain. Cherry Creek pursues a northeasterly course, emptying into the Delaware just below the mouth of Brodhead's Creek and just above the Delaware Water Gap. Aquanchicola Creek flows southwest, along the westward extension of the same valley, and empties into the Lehigh River at Lehigh Gap, in Carbon County.

Pohopoco or Big Creek and Frantz's Creek rise in the western part of the county and flow southwest across the Carbon County line; the former along the north side of Wire Ridge, emptying into the Lehigh River, near Weissport, and the latter along the south side of the same ridge; but at Little Gap, in Carbon County, it cuts through Godfrey's Ridge on the south and empties into the Aquanchicola.

Besides these streams, which traverse the lowland districts of the county, there are three or four belonging entirely, so far as their relations to Monroe County are concerned, to the Pocono Plateau, viz.: The Tobyhanna, which rises near the north line of the county, pursues a general southwest course to the Little Tunkhannock, which here forms the line between Monroe and Carbon, and here, mingling its waters with the latter stream, the two combined continue the northwest course of the Little Tunkhannock, emptying into the Lehigh River near Stoddardsville.

The Tunkhannock, or Big Tunkhannock,[1] rises near the middle of the Plateau, flows southwest and empties into the Tobyhanna, near the middle of its course. The Little Tunkhannock, before referred to, rises near the southern edge of the Plateau, flows through Long Pond, in Tunkhannock township,—the pond being a mere lateral expansion of the creek as it flows through a tract of swamp land,—crosses the old Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike and then, making a sharp bend to the northwest, at which point it is intersected by the artificial boundary line between Monroe and Carbon, it takes a direct course to the Lehigh, meeting on the way the Tobyhanna, as before mentioned. The Lehigh River is the only remaining notable stream of the county. This river rises in Wayne County, flows southwest and for about twelve miles above the mouth of the Tobyhanna it forms the line between Monroe County on the one side and Lackawanna and Luzerne Counties on the other.

[1] In the Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania, report for Pike and Monroe Counties, p. 30, this stream is called "Tunkhanna," and the Little Tunkhannock is called simply the "Tunkhannock," but locally these two streams are distinguished by the names here given.

Monroe County, then, is an irregular figure bounded on the north by Luzerne, Lackawanna, Wayne and Pike Counties, on the east by Pike County, on the south by the Delaware River, separating it from New Jersey, and by a surveyor's line along the top of the Blue Mountain, separating it from Northampton County, and on the west by a surveyor's line and the Little Tunkhannock and Tobyhanna Creeks, separating it from Carbon County. In its extreme length it is about thirty-one miles, disregarding the meanderings of the Delaware River, and about thirty miles in extreme width. Its southern and western lines are, however, several miles longer than its northern and eastern lines. Its superficial area is five hundred and eighty-five square miles, or three hundred and seventy-four thousand four hundred acres, of which fully one-half lie on what we may call the second floor of the county: i. e., on the Pocono Plateau.

Scale: Horizontal lines, 5 miles to 1 inch; vertical, 3000 feet to 1 inch.

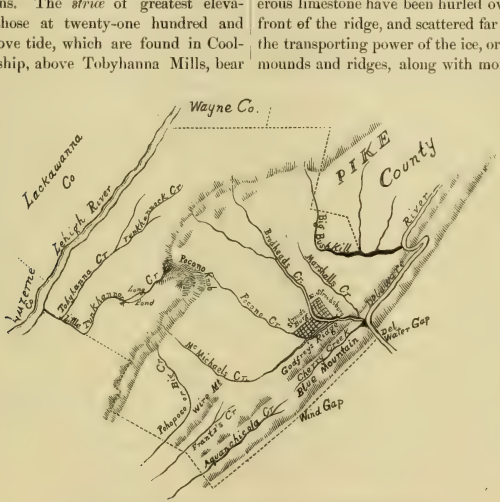
References: a, Pocono Plateau; b, southern escarpment of mountain; c, rolling country, extending from Pocono range, on the north to Godfrey's Ridge on the south, in the eastern end of the county, and to Wire Ridge in western end of county; d, Godfrey's Ridge, otherwise called Walpack Ridge; e, Cherry Valley; f, Monroe County side of the Blue or Kittatinny Mountain.

The map on the following page shows a topographical outline of the county with its principal streams and mountain ranges.

Geologists declare that Monroe County is as interesting, in a geological point of view, as it is uninteresting mineralogically. (See Second Geological Report, Pike and Monroe Counties, 1882.)

Possessed, so far as yet discovered, of a few valuable ores, and with a rock formation that gives little promise in this direction, with surface strata whose place in the geological gamut is thousands of feet below the coal-measures of the adjoining counties north and west, there would seem to be little of a mineralogical nature in Monroe County geology of value, regarded from a merely economic stand-point, aside from her flagstone, her limestone, her cement and paint-beds, and, in some localities, her Marcellus slates and iron-ore.

But throughout this romantic district there is rich and abundant material for scientific research, and to the eye of the scholar, if not to that of the capitalist, the rocks of Monroe must ever be of profound interest; for here nature has stamped, in indelible lines, the record of her pre-historic operations; and here the God of nature, before He gave the Decalogue to Moses, inscribed upon these tables of stone the fiat of His will.



Glaciation.—The evidences of glacial action, except in a portion of the western townships, are wide-spread and abundant throughout the county, in the shape of drift deposits, morainic mounds, glacial striæ, and the planed and polished surfaces of the rocks, as well as by their disruption and erosion.

The two great gaps which occur in the Blue Mountain within the limits of this county, and which are known as the Delaware Water Gap and the Wind Gap, stand as everlasting monuments, doubtless, of the resistless power of the great northern glacier, which at one time covered nearly the whole face of this county, in common with much of Northern Pennsylvania and the States adjoining.

Upon the tops of our highest mountains, twenty-one hundred and fifty feet above tide, the great glacier has left his foot-prints in scratches and grooves in the solid rock, and in the Stroudsburg Valley and Cherry Valley as well, the same well-known marks are found at elevations only four hundred to four hundred and fifty feet above tide. The direction of these striæ is always toward the southwest, corresponding, in some degree, with the trend of the mountains. The striæ of greatest elevation, viz.: those at twenty-one hundred and fifty feet above tide, which are found in Coolbaugh township, above Tobyhanna Mills, bear S. 5° W., or very nearly due south; those farther down, and nearer the sturdy barriers of Godfrey's Ridge and the Blue Mountain, bear more to the west, some of them as much as 70° west of south.

The hard rocks of Southern Monroe, like the corniferous limestone and cauda-galli of Godfrey's Ridge, have been planed and polished by this same resistless agency, and Professor White, in his report upon the Second Geological Survey of Pike and Monroe Counties (pp. 46, 47), states that nearly the entire stratum of corniferous limestone, which, in pre-glacial times, covered the southern side of Godfrey's Ridge, has been removed from the top and side of the northern slope by this same power, all the way from Carpenter's Point to Stroudsburg. The cauda-galli, which originally underlay the corniferous limestone, has been denuded, except in protected folds, and now forms the surface rock of the north slope, bare and polished by the ice, while huge blocks of the corniferous limestone have been hurled over the south front of the ridge, and scattered far and wide by the transporting power of the ice, or deposited in mounds and ridges, along with morainic débris.

TOPOGRAPHICAL OUTLINE MAP OF MONROE COUNTY.

This stupendous result was doubtless facilitated by reason of the double system of joints which prevails in this stratum,—to wit, the bedding-planes and transverse seams furnishing numerous fissures, into which the glacier drove its Titanic wedges, thus tearing off immense masses of rock at once,—but if this has been done to Godfrey's or Walpack Ridge, it is not difficult to believe that the same agency was able, and actually did, cleave asunder the Medina sandstone and Oneida conglomerate of the Blue Mountain, when, with imperceptible movement, but with an energy resistless as fate, the great ice-sheet pressed down upon it, and thus, aided and supplemented by the wild rush of the pent-up sub-glacial waters, were the two gate-ways, above referred to, opened through the mountain.

Professor White, in his Report, already referred to (p. 63), referring to the Wind Gap, says:

"I could find no evidence that the Northern Ice had ever passed through the notch, so that its origin cannot be ascribed to glacial erosion, although it may have served as a waste-weir through which the water from the melting Ice escaped Southward, when it filled the old valley to the North to an elevation higher than the level of the surface in the Gap."

And Professor Lesley, in a note upon the same subject, says:

"If this gap" (referring to the Lehigh Gap), "and the Delaware Water Gap were occupied, the one by a high, wide tongue of ice, banked against the Bake-Oven, and the other by the great New York main glacier, then, although the sub-glacial waters would still issue by ice-caverns through the two gaps, the residual surface glacial waters would probably be obliged to pour over the crest of the Blue Mountain. If they did this at the Bake-Oven for a short time, the only part of the problem of the genesis of these two remarkable topographical phenomena remaining unexplained would be the selection of these two points along the crest in preference to any others."

The great terminal moraine enters the county across the crest of the Blue or Kittatinny Mountains diagonally, between Fox Gap and Wind Gap, and is thence plainly traced by its ridge of drift deposit, in a northwesterly direction, to the vicinity of Saylorsburg, where it turns north, by the way of Mechanicsville, Brodheadsville and McMichael's to Pocono Knob, back of Tannersville, encircling the Knob on its eastern and northern sides at about two-thirds of its height, thus plainly indicating that in the glacial age this Knob stood a solitary island in the edge of a boundless sea of ice; thence to a point near the division line between Tunkhannock and Tobyhanna townships, where it turns Westward, and, crossing Tunkhannock township north of Long Pond, it passes out of the county a little north of the point where the Little Tunkhannock Creek becomes the county-line.

This great moraine, as it traverses the Pocono Plateau, is described by Professor Lesley, State Geologist, as a ridge of drift one hundred feet high, of so remarkable an aspect that it has been named by the inhabitants "The Long Ridge."

Drift Deposits.—Behind this moraine—i. e., north and east of the line indicated—the whole country is covered with drift deposits. This includes the whole county, except the townships of Eldred and Polk and portions of Ross, Chestnut Hill and Tunkhannock, where drift deposits are not found, or, if so, occurring in the form of modified drift, worked over by post-glacial floods.

The drift is of the ordinary composition, consisting of boulders of every size, from a pebble to masses of rock weighing hundreds of tons and containing thousands of cubic feet,—some of them angular and others rounded and water-worn,—together with much sand, clay, and, in many localities, quick-sand. The boulders are of rocks coming to the surface in this and adjoining counties, no granitic or metamorphic rocks having been observed among them.

The drift is of varying depth,—from two hundred feet or more, in some of the valleys, down to a few feet, or perhaps an occasional boulder on some of the summits. This is true of the southern part of the county, where the land is rolling. On the Pocono Plateau the drift is spread more uniformly, to a depth of twenty to thirty or thirty-five feet, post-glacial erosion having had less effect than where deep valleys and high hills alternate.

"Kettle-Holes" and Resulting Lakelets.—Frequent depressions, or kettle-holes, occur in the drift, and some of them, having become filled with water, now constitute beautiful ponds or lakelets. Two of these—Echo Lake, in Middle Smithfield township, and Minneola Lake, in Chestnut Hill township—are surrounded by high banks of drift and have no visible outlet, although the former has a subterranean drainage into Coolbaugh's Pond, and thence by the way of Pond Creek into Marshall's Creek; and the latter has a similar underground outlet through the coarse gravel into McMichael's Creek, one-fourth of a mile distant.

Lake Paponoming, on the line between Hamilton and Ross townships, is also an old glacial kettle-hole, filled with water, surrounded by banks of drift forty or fifty feet high. It has, however, now, surface drainage over a low place in its drift environment, into the Lake branch of McMichael's Creek. This lake is located in the line of the great terminal moraine. It is a beautiful lake and one of the most popular resorts in the county.

To the deposition of the drift material in the glacial age, modified by subsequent floods, many of the striking features of the landscape in the vicinity of Stroudsburg are due, as well as many peculiarities of soil. Several fine exposures of till occur in this region, the brickyards of Stroudsburg and East Stroudsburg being adaptations of the clay of this deposit to practical purposes.

Buried Valleys.—Monroe, as well as Pike County, is remarkable for its great number of buried valleys. The Delaware River, all the way from Port Jervis to the Delaware Water-Gap, flows over one, or, more strictly speaking, partially over two, lying at least one hundred feet below the present bed of the river, the original channel having been silted up to that depth.

The Stroudsburg buried valley really extends through, all the way from Stroudsburg to the Hudson River at Rondout, although the middle section of it—i. e., that part from Port Jervis to Bushkill—is occupied by the Delaware River, which flows through it, that stream entering the valley at Port Jervis and leaving it at Bushkill, at which latter point the river cuts through Walpack, or Godfrey's Ridge, and enters the Clinton Red Shale Valley, running parallel with and south of the Stroudsburg Valley.

The Marcellus Shale is the bed-rock underlying the whole course of this valley in Pennsylvania and a great part of its course in New York. The eastern section of this valley, running from Port Jervis to Rondout, is at its highest point but about eighty feet above the river at Port Jervis, and this fact has given rise to a theory with some scientists that the Delaware may have, in pre-glacial times, run that way and formed a tributary of the Hudson. However apocryphal this may be, it is certain that the identity, or, rather, the unity, of the different sections of this valley is attested by their geological structure, by the character and depth of their drift accumulations and by the conformation of the hill-ranges on either side.

This same Marcellus shale, or Stroudsburg Valley, continues on west from Stroudsburg, by the way of Kunkletown and Sciota, near which latter point it is bifurcated, one branch passing northwestward along the north branch of McMichael's Creek to Brodheadsville, and thence west and southwest to the Lehigh River, near Weissport, the latter part of its course being occupied by Pohopoko Creek. The other branch keeps southwestward from Sciota, along the Lake branch of McMichael's Creek and Frantz's Creek to the point where the driftless area commences, in Ross township, southwest of the great terminal moraine, where the wide, drift-filled valley suddenly terminates, and the creek continues through a deep trench cut out of the Marcellus shale, which here comes to the surface.

So that practically we may say there is one continuous valley, underlaid with Marcellus shale and filled with drift material, with a comparatively uniform surface from five hundred to seven hundred feet above tide, running all the way from Rondout, on the Hudson, through Stroudsburg to Weissport, on the Lehigh. It constitutes a natural route for a railroad from the coal-fields to New England, which has long been contemplated, and which will doubtless some time be built.

Cherry Valley, just south from the Stroudsburg Valley, running parallel with it and separated from it by Godfrey's or Walpack Ridge, is very similar to the one just described, only that it has for its bed the Clinton red shale instead of the Marcellus shale.

This valley, like the Stroudsburg Valley, exists in three sections, of which Cherry Valley proper is the western. It begins in Orange County, N. Y., and keeping along the base of the Shawangunk (Blue) Mountain, passes through New Jersey to the Delaware River at the Walpack Bend. At this point the Delaware River, having cut through Walpack Ridge, enters the valley and flows down it to the Delaware Water Gap, where it cuts through the Blue Mountain. The eastern section in New Jersey is called Flatbrook Valley; the middle portion occupied by the river is called the Delaware Valley, but Flatbrook Valley, Delaware Valley and Cherry Valley are essentially one and the same, and to this may be added the Aquanchicola Valley, extending through to the Lehigh.

Geological Structure.—The rocks of Monroe County, with the exception of a narrow strip along the southern border, belong entirely, like those of Pike, to the Devonian Age. Silurian strata first come to the surface in the vicinity of Walpack Ridge, enter largely into the composition of that ridge, together with the lower members of Devonian formation, and thence continue to form the surface rock to the southern line of the county.

The interval between the Mount Pleasant conglomerate, of Pocono Series (No. X.) and the Oneida conglomerate (No. IV.) (both inclusive) compasses all the strata of Monroe County, some of the intervening members being entirely absent.

Commencing at the north line of the county, the highest peaks of the Pocono Mountain are capped with Mount Pleasant conglomerate, in massive, grayish-white cliffs. Next in order in the descending scale come the red rocks of the Catskill Series (No. IX.), the Mount Pleasant red shale, members of which form the surface rock over much of the whole Pocono Plateau, from the north line of the county to the southern escarpment of the mountain. Below this comes a thin stratum (of uncertain thickness, because always partially concealed under drift) of green sandstones and shales, called the Elk Mountain sandstones and shales, and estimated by Prof. White at about two hundred feet in thickness. Next comes the Cherry Ridge Group, consisting of conglomerates (composed of quartz pebbles, pieces of sandstone, shale and fish fragments, all cemented into a reddish-gray matrix of coarse sand) and red shale. The conglomerates form the front escarpment of the Pocono Mountain, west from Tannersville, and crop out in long lines of cliffs in the southeastern portion of Tunkhannock and Coolbaugh townships.

The Honesdale sandstones, next in order, run through Barrett, Paradise, Pocono, Chestnut Hill and Polk townships, being estimated at 500 feet in thickness at the western line of the county.

The Montrose red shale, next in order, runs through Barrett, crossing the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, near Henryville, with a thickness of six hundred feet, and continuing on through Pocono, Jackson, Chestnut Hill and Polk townships, attaining a thickness of more than fifteen hundred feet at the western line of the county.

The Delaware River flags.—This is a series of greenish-gray sandstone and shale which extends all the way from the Delaware to the Lehigh, crossing Pike, Monroe and Carbon Counties. In Monroe County it passes through Barrett, Paradise, Pocono, Jackson, Chestnut Hill and Polk townships. Excellent flagging is quarried in this series at various points in the northeastern section of the county. Where exposed to atmospheric influences the stone splits easily along the bedding planes into sheets from two to six or eight inches in thickness and of lengths varying from two to fifteen or twenty feet, according to the space between the natural transverse seams. In Barrett township, on the West Bushkill, there is a fine exposure of flagstone at the base and side of a hill and of true clay slate at the top. This top stratum, being entirely free from sand and grit and easily splitting to any desired thickness, on a line with the bedding planes, is excellently adapted to fine, ornamental work, such as mantels, table-tops, etc., if existing in sufficient quantities,—a fact yet to be determined.

The New Milford red shale.—This is the last red horizon above the base of the Catskill Series. It crosses Big Bushkill Creek near Ressaca, and Brodhead's Creek near Sprague ville, where it is exposed in a cutting of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, just above the station, dipping 25° N. 25° W. It crosses Pocono Creek about one mile and a quarter above Bartonsville and continues westward, increasing in thickness, through Jackson, Chestnut Hill and Polk townships.

Starrucca sandstone.—This is a succession of hard, greenish-gray sandstones, destitute of organic remains, and corresponding physically with the other Catskill sandstones. They represent the Starrucca beds—greatly thickened—of Wayne and Susquehanna Counties. They enter Monroe County about three-fourths of a mile above Little Bushkill Falls, and pass southwestward, crossing Big Bushkill below Ressaca, and Brodhead's Creek and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad at Sprague ville, and the Pocono Creek about one mile above Bartonville. Continuing westward, red beds begin to make their appearance in this horizon. Through Pike and Monroe Counties these beds are about six hundred feet thick.

Fossils of the Catskill Series.—The only evidence of animal life during the epoch of the Catskill formation is, according to Prof. White, the occasional appearance of what appears to be the fish-bone fragments in the calcareous breccias occurring in the upper half of the series. No molluscan fossils have been observed in all the large area covered by these rocks.

Plant remains also are of rare occurrence. The only locality in the district where any determinable forms have been observed is in a cut on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, a short distance below Henryville. There, near the base of the Montrose red shale, great numbers of Archæopteris Jacksoni occur. In many places, however, pieces of stems and fragments of plants are to be seen, but so broken up as not to be classified.

Next in order, progressing downwards, come the Chemung beds, the Portage Series being absent from this district.

We again quote from Professor White, in his report on the Second Geological Survey of Pike and Monroe Counties, p. 105,—

"The series is made up of a succession of bluish-gray, hard sandstone beds in layers from one-half to two feet thick, often somewhat micaceous, and usually interstratified with blue, sandy shales. Occasionally olive sandstones make their appearance. The whole series is sparingly fossiliferous, the most common forms being Streptorhyachus, Chemungenses, Spirifer disjunctus, Pteronites sp? Productella sp? The species are generally badly presented, and while all have a well-known Chemung facies, many were undeterminable."

The red beds of Chemung, which are elsewhere present in Northern Pennsylvania, are absent from the Pike and Monroe districts.

The Hamilton Series, upper, middle and lower, are well represented through the district, entering it at Bushkill and running about S. 65° W. to the western margin of Hamilton township, where it bifurcates, one prong reaching the Lehigh at Bowman's, and the other on the crest of the Lehighton axis. The thickness of the whole Hamilton series at Stroudsburg is twenty-two hundred feet, at the meridian of Brodheadsville two thousand feet, and gradually thinning away to the Lehigh River. All the members of this series are quite fossiliferous, the Tully limestone, notably so, being composed of corals, shells and crinoids in great abundance. This coral horizon is seen strongly developed along the road just south from Gilbert's post-office, and also about a mile north from Kresgeville, in Polk township. The effect of atmospheric influences upon these beds, in the removal of the lime from their calcareous portions, is well illustrated along the road from Stroudsburg to Sprague ville, near the house of Edward Bonynge, where there is a fine exposure of the bed, honeycombed and spongy from this cause.

The Upper Helderberg beds are represented in this county by the corniferous limestone and the cauda-galli grit, the Onondaga and Schoharie beds of New York not appearing. The corniferous limestone and cauda-galli thin away to the westward, and seem to disappear entirely near the western line of Hamilton township, coincident with a thickening of the Oriskany sandstone, on which they rest.

The belt of corniferous limestone, fortunately for the agricultural interests of the county, is quite narrow, seldom more than one-fourth of a mile in width, and often not near so much, the rocks being steeply inclined, and mostly confined to the north foot-slope and south side of Godfrey's Ridge.

There is a fine exposure of both of these strata in the long rock cut on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, below East Stroudsburg, known as "Forest Cut," where the contact of the corniferous limestone with the cauda-galli is plainly seen. There is also a good example of the effects of atmospheric exposure upon the cauda-galli to be seen along the road from Stroudsburg to the Delaware Water Gap, where the same passes over the top of Godfrey's Ridge, or "Foxtown Hill," as it is locally known. As we have elsewhere said, the cauli-galli forms the surface rock on the top of this ridge, owing to the removal, by glacial agency, of the corniferous limestone. There is a strong outcrop over the crest of the ridge of "slate gravel," as it is locally known, and appreciated as excellent road material. It is rock of this stratum broken up into chips and splinters by the action of the weather, very similar in appearance to the same kind of material found in the Hamilton sandstone and Marcellus shale strata, along the Milford road, above Bushkill.

Fossil mollusks and corals are quite abundant in the corniferous limestone, especially so in the neighborhood of Stroudsburg.

Passing now into the Silurian Age of the world, we find beneath the cauda-galli a representative of the Oriskany formation. Commencing as a cherty pebble bed, not more than eight or ten feet thick at the eastern line of Monroe County, it thickens up in its passage across the county, until at its western line it appears as a massive quartz conglomerate one hundred and seventy-five feet thick.

Beneath this stratum come the Lower Helderberg beds. First, in the eastern part of the county a series of shales and conglomerates, denominated the Stormsville shales and conglomerates, which in their progress westward seem to become merged in the overlying Oriskany formation, accounting thus for the thickening up of the latter.

The glass factory at East Stroudsburg obtains its sand from the Oriskany formation in Hamilton township. It makes excellent bottles, fruit-jars, etc. West of Hamilton township the Oriskany is much broken up and disintegrated, forming beds of fine, white, silicious material of unknown depth. These beds are found in the vicinity of Saylorsburg and Kunkletown, an analysis of two specimens from which, by Messrs. McCreath and Stinson, gives the following results:

No. I.		No. II.
Silica	82.020	Silica	72.800

Magnesia	.774	Magnesia	1.045
Water	2.842	Water	3.832
	96.916		96.147

Stormsville Hydraulic Cement Beds.—These beds extend from the eastern line of the county southwestward beyond the centre of the county, and are from five to ten feet in thickness. Professor White identifies these beds with the great water lime beds of Rondout, Kingston and Rosendale, N. Y., and from analyses had of this material there is no doubt but excellent cement might be manufactured at various points in this stratum.

Messrs. McCreath and Stinson show the composition of the Stormsville cement beds as follows, four of the specimens coming from Middle Smithfield, and the fifth from Hamilton township:[1]

	I.	II.	III.	IV.	V.
Carbonate of Lime	38.910	36.428	37.714	37.107	43.839

An important member of the Lower Helderberg series is the Bossardsville limestone. This rock is extensively quarried in a thick stratum of this formation at Bossardsville, in Hamilton township, whence it derives its name. All the principal limestone quarries of the county are in this formation. This limestone burns readily into a light, gray lime, very valuable for agricultural and building purposes.

[1] Taken from Second Geological Report on Pike and Monroe, pp. 136, 137.

Analyses of this limestone, taken from different localities, and made by Mr. McCreath at his Harrisburg laboratory, give the following result:[1]

	I.	II.	III.	IV.	V.
Carbonate of Lime	94.285	87.928	82.732	93.297	93.875

Insoluble Residue	2.850	7.860	11.930	4.250	3.920

I. and II. were taken from the Bossardsville quarries in Hamilton township; III., IV. and V. were taken from C. Van Auken's quarries, in Middle Smithfield township.

A due regard for allotted space, in a work of this character, will hardly permit even cursory mention of all the different strata. Passing from the Lower Helderberg (No. VI.), we come next to the Clinton red shale (No. V.).

These shales are of a deep, dull color, and, as we have before remarked, underlie the whole of Cherry Valley and Aquanchicola Valley, and the Delaware River has scooped the main portion of its channel out of the same, all the way from Walpack Bend, or Decker's Ferry, to the Delaware Water Gap.

No fossils whatever are found in these red beds, and to their destitution of organic life Professor White attributes the fact that the iron, of which a large percentage is contained in the rocks, exists in a diffused state, instead of being collected into ore-beds. He says that if all the iron contained in the two thousand feet of this rock which crops out on the Lehigh could be collected into one mass, it would make a solid bed of metallic iron more than fifty feet thick Hence it is not for lack of iron that no ores occur in the Clinton red shale of Monroe County, but because in bygone ages there was a lack of organic life to concentrate it in layers.

The Medina Sandstone and the Oneida Conglomerate, No. IV.—A series of greenish-gray sandstones, often interstratified with red, sandy layers, the sandstone frequently showing scattered pebbles of quartz, underlies the Clinton red shales. These beds are exposed along either bank of the Delaware River in its passage through the Gap, and they constitute the Medina sandstone.

Immediately beneath appears the Oneida conglomerate, consisting of very hard, massive, gray rocks, containing vast quantities of quartz pebbles, many of them quite large, with no red rocks whatever.

These gray, conglomerate rocks extend down to the Hudson River slates, which, however, do not appear in this county, but come to the surface about half a mile south of the county line, in Northampton.

The Oneida rocks make the summit of the Blue Mountain, and their great hardness and indestructibility have preserved that range, as well as the Delaware and Lehigh Water Gaps, from erosion.

Ores.—The red rocks of the Catskill Series, like the Clinton red shale, show a large percentage of iron, but in a diffused form. There is an equal absence of fossils and of iron-ore. In Ross township, however, on the land of Samuel Lessig, there has been found quite a large deposit of brown hematite iron-ore, in the Lower Helderberg, and five to eight feet above the Decker's Ferry sandstone of the group.

An analysis of specimens from this locality gives the following result:

	I.	II.
Iron	41.500	39.425
Sulphur	0.030	0.007
Phosphorus	0.305	0.321
Insoluble residue	23.500	26.730

A bed of bog iron-ore occurs on top of the Marcellus, opposite Kunkletown, in Eldred township. This was once manufactured into metallic paint quite extensively, and made a very fine article. The deposit, so far as developed, appears quite rich enough to warrant mining and shipping, if it exists in sufficient quantities.

Beds of bog iron-ore also exist near the village of Sciota, in Hamilton township, immediately above the Marcellus shale, and nodules of iron-ore have been found on the land of John Merwine, near Merwinesburg, at the foot of the Pocono Mountain, scattered over the surface of the red Catskill rocks.

Lead, Copper and Zinc-Ores.—In the

[1] Taken from the same report to which reference has been so frequently made. p. 142.

Medina sandstone and Oneida conglomerate of the Shawangunk or Blue Mountain ores of lead and zinc are known to exist, although none in paying quantities have so far been discovered within the limits of this county. In Middle Smithfield township, on land of Mr. J. Turn, in the Clinton red rocks, at the upper end of Paxon's Island, there occur many traces of copper in scattered patches of green, and also traces of zincblende.

School Slates.—In Polk township, near the western line of the county, school slates were once extensively manufactured in the Marcellus beds. They made a superior article, and their manufacture could still be carried on with profit were it not for the lack of railroad facilities, rendering it impossible to compete with localities more highly favored in this respect.

Ochre.—Much ochre is found in Ross township, interstratified with the iron-ore in the Lower Helderberg formation. It is of a dull yellowish color and would doubtless make good paint, although never tested practically so far as we know.

It has been analyzed, however, with the following result:

Silica	57.400
Alumina	19.633
Sesquioxide of iron	10.167
Lime	0.100
Magnesia	1.740
Water	6.458

Soils.—The best soils, as well as the worst, for agricultural operations are found in the southern part of the county: the best, in the Hamilton, Lower Helderberg and Clinton red geological areas; the worst, where the Upper Helderberg, the Oriskany sandstone, the Medina sandstone and the Oneida conglomerate come to the surface.

This mixed condition extends, to a greater or less extent, over portions of ten townships, viz.: Middle Smithfield, Smithfield, Stroud, Hamilton, Pocono, Jackson, Chestnut Hill, Ross, Polk and Eldred.

The difference between the two classes of rocks above referred to, in regard to their soil-making properties, rests primarily in the comparative readiness with which they break up and decompose, and assimilate with the finer portions of drift material or alluvial deposits accumulated upon them. The corniferous limestone and cauda-galli, composing the Upper Helderberg of this district, and also the Oneida conglomerate, are notable for the facility with which they do not disintegrate. They are hard and unyielding in their nature, and have preserved for ages, with little change, the contour of Walpack Ridge and the Blue Mountain, with the gaps or gorges in the latter range. Of course there can be no farming where these beds come to the surface, and it is fortunate that their dip is so rapid and their surface area not more extended. They have their use in the economy of nature, doubtless, in giving to our scenery its character of picturesqueness and sublimity.

On the other hand, in the soft shales and limestones of the Hamilton and Lower Helderberg beds, and in the Clinton red beds of the Delaware, Cherry and Aquanchicola Valleys, we have a very fine agricultural region, producing all the cereals, root and other vegetables in great abundance.

Full one-half of the county (the northern half) is, as we have seen, underlaid with rocks of the Catskill group. Here, too, a mixed condition of things prevails. Where the surface is not littered with boulders of the drift deposit, or rendered barren by reason of massive sandstone outcrops, farming is not only practicable, but pleasant and profitable.

The inhabitants of this region are turning their attention more and more to agricultural pursuits, as the county is gradually cleared of its native forest growths and the lumber interests, which have heretofore been predominant, decline. New clearings dot the wilderness, and thrifty homes here and there greet the eye, where a few years ago there was nothing but a dreary waste of "scrub-oaks" and laurel. There are extensive tracts of sandy loam and red shale soil upon the Pocono Plateau, comparatively free from boulders and loose stones, easily farmed, fertile and productive. Land is cheap and the writer confidently expects to see, in the next few years, a large development of the agricultural resources of this region.

Two representative farmers of this region, one in the extreme west and the other in the extreme east, report as follows:

Mr. Jacob Blakeslee, of Tobyhanna township, writes,—

"I have 75 acres cleared and under cultivation. I have not raised wheat since 1879; then I had over 25 bushels to the acre. The production of rye (last crop) was very good, but I did not measure the amount. The production of oats was 55 bushels per acre; corn in ear, 50 bushels per acre; potatoes, 125 bushels per acre; hay, 2 tons per acre. Apples, such as Baldwins, Greenings, Rusty Coats, &c., are very fine and plentiful. Also Pears, Plums and the small fruits are produced in great abundance. Apiaries thrive excellently; there being an abundance of natural food for the bees. As regards soil, I may say the different kinds are argillaceous, Sandstone and Shale. The predominating element is Shale, which varies in color from red to gray, and finally to a rich black color. The soil is, in places, loamy. I think the country is best adapted to the production of corn, oats, hay and potatoes; rye and wheat also do very well.

"In fertilization I used last year 5 tons of phosphates and 100 tons of barn-yard manure. I prefer the manure.

"In speaking of the history of this place. I may say that thirty-five years ago this region was a dense forest. At that time lumbering was the chief industry. Since then the country has been cleared by cutting and fire, so that now there is a comparatively level, open country, interspersed with clumps of woodland. With the removal of the forest the people turned their attention to agriculture, and with great success. As a proof of the richness of the soil I add that land first cleared raises very fine and heavy crops of hay for six years without fertilization. As a pasturage land this region is unequaled. Horses, cattle, &c., are brought from the adjoining counties of this State and also from New Jersey to be pastured. . . .

"As a country for stock-raising, this locality is unsurpassed."

We will add that Mr. Blakeslee makes a specialty of stock raising and is equally successful with horses, cattle and sheep.

Mr. Joseph Brower, in the eastern part of Barret township and near the eastern line of the county, settled some thirty years ago in an unbroken wilderness, although many thrifty farms are now under cultivation or being cleared for that purpose in his vicinity. He reports as follows:

"Acres under cultivation, about	90
Wheat raised per acre	18	bushels.
Rye " " "	16	"
Oats " " "	30	"
Corn " " "	35	"
Potatoes " " "	100	"
Tons of hay " "	2

"Different kinds of soil: Red Shale and Clay loam. We find the red shale is best for rye, wheat and corn. Fertilizers used the last season: Manure, 180 tons; lime, 150 bushels.

"Apples raised, 330 bushels; buckwheat raised, 40 bushels per acre."

A Bone Cave.—In closing this chapter, it is proper to advert, as a matter of archæological interest, to a cave which exists in Walpack, or Godfrey's Ridge, in Stroud township, about two miles west of Stroudsburg. A cave was long known to exist at this point, on land of Mr. Hartman, near the summit of the ridge, consisting of little more than a hole in the face of the limestone cliff; but in the year 1879 or 1880, Mr. T. D. Paret, an enterprising manufacturer, fond of scientific pursuits, took the place in hand, and by his excavations in the clay deposit that had nearly filled the cave, and in the débris outside of the entrance, developed the true nature of the cave and unearthed many curious relics of bygone ages.

An account of these discoveries cannot be better given than by the following extracts which we quote from the proceedings of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, of the date of September 21, 1880, at which Professor Leidy made a report upon the subject.

"Bone Caves of Pennsylvania.—Professor Leidy remarked that in the early part of August, in company with Dr. T. C. Porter, of Easton, he had visited Hartman's Cave, in the vicinity of Stroudsburg, Pa. They had been invited by Mr. T. Dunkin Paret, of that place, who had recently undertaken the exploration of the cave, and had obtained from it an interesting and important collection of animal remains, which had been submitted to Professor Leidy's examination.

"The cave is situated about five miles from Delaware Water Gap, in a ridge which separates Cherry Valley from the valleys of the Pocono and McMichael's Creeks. The ridge is an anti-clinal fold of the Helderberg or Upper Silurian limestone, and the cave occupies the axis of the fold, and opens in the face of a cliff formed by a cross section of the ridge. An accumulation of débris forms a slope at the base of the cliff, and above the débris, and just below the arching roof of the cave, a low passage-way has long been known, into which adventurous boys would creep.

"Mr. Paret commenced the exploration by having a passage dug through the débris to the entrance of the cave, and then extended the trench within the latter for upwards of a hundred feet and to a depth sufficient to walk erect. At one place within the cave, the digging was carried to the rock floor. It would thus appear that the cave is occupied by a bed of clay about ten feet in depth. On this is a thin layer of stalagmite, and on this again, about a foot of black, friable earth, mingled with animal and vegetable remains.

"Professor Leidy supposed that during the glacial period, a stream of water from melting snow and ice at a higher level had made a passage-way through the fissured limestone of the anti-clinal axis, and had left in it the abandant clay deposit. When the cave ceased to be a water-course, the layer of stalagmite was formed, and subsequently the more friable earth accumulated from materials, such as dust and leaves blown in and mingled with the remains of animals, occupants of the cave, and of their food. . . .

The remains thus far discovered are of such interest as to encourage Mr. Paret to continue further exploration. Most of those collected to the present time were exhibited by Professor Leidy, and consist of the following:

"Numerous fragments and splinters of limb bones of smaller and larger animals, many or most of which exhibit the marks of being gnawed, whether by rodents or smaller carnivores is somewhat uncertain. A few also show the marks of canine teeth of medium-sized carnivores. Some of the splinters pertain to such large and strong bones as to render it questionable whether they were produced by even our largest carnivores, and probably are the remnants of human feasts, in which the bones were crushed to obtain the marrow. Numerous bones and fragments of others of the smaller and smallest animals. These include especially limb bones and lower jaws, and less frequently, skulls, fragments of others and vertebræ. Many of these are also gnawed, while many are not.

"The fragments of larger bones may be supposed to have been conveyed into the cave by small carnivores. A few pieces of bone are somewhat charred, and a small fragment of a lower jaw, containing a molar tooth of the bison, also apparently exhibits the marks of fire. This probably is a remnant from a human feast, which may have been carried into the cave by some small gleaner.

"All the bones and fragments together amount to about half a bushel. Most of them pertain to animals of a kind still living, though some of them no longer belong to the fauna of our State, and a few of the remains are those of extinct animals. How far the remains of different species are cotemporary is uncertain, though it is most probable that they were introduced through a long succession of years from the time following the glacial period.

"The remains of extinct animals consist of an incisor tooth and half a dozen molars of the great rodent Castoroides Ohioensis, and portions of the upper and lower jaw with teeth of a young Peccary, the Dicotyles nasutus, previously known only from a single fragment of an upper jaw discovered in Indiana (Extinct Mammalia of North America, 385, pl. xxviii., figs. 1, 2, Jour. Acad. Nat. Sc. vii. 1869).

"The remains of animals no longer living in Pennsylvania are as follows: Bones and teeth of the Caribou, or Woodland Reindeer, Rangifer caribou.

"A fragment of the lower jaw containing the last molar tooth of the Bison, B. Americanus.

"Many lower jaw halves and other bones and teeth of the Wood-rat, Neotoma floridana. Most of these are of comparatively large size, and of the character of similar remains referred by Professor Baird to a supposed extinct species, with the name of Neotoma magister. (U. S. P. R. R. Exp. and Surveys—Zoology, viii. 1857, 498).

"Remains of other mammals are as follows: Lynx, Felis Canadensis; Wolf, Canis lupus; Gray Fox, Vulpes Virginianus; Skunk, Mephitis mephitica; Weasel, Putorius ermineus; Raccoon, Procyon lotor; Mole, Scalops aquaticus; Dusky Bat, Vespertilio fuscus; Little Brown Bat, V. subulatus; Woodchuck, Arctomys monax; Porcupine, Erethizon dorsatus; Beaver, Castor fiber; Muskrat, Fiber zibethicus; Gray Squirrel, Sciurus Carolinensis; Ground Squirrel, Tamias striatus; Gray Rabbit, Lepus sylvaticus; Meadow Mouse, Arvicola riparius; White-footed Mouse, Hesperomys leucopus; Deer, Cervus Virginianus; Elk, Cervus Canadensis. . . .

"The collection further contains numerous bird bones, chiefly of the wild turkey, some of turtles, and others of several species of snakes. In the same stratum were also found a number of shells of mollusks, chiefly Helix albolabris, H. alternata and H. tridentata. Also a valve of Unio complanatus.

"The human remains are of an interesting character. One is a large stone celt of hard, brown slate, obtained from the bone earth some distance within the cave. There are five bone awls, several of which exhibit marks of gnawing. Some of these were found in the cave and others in the outside débris. An implement consists of the prong of an antler, worked so as to be barbed on one side, and was probably used as a needle for making nets.

"A small implement of bone resembles in its present condition a crochet needle, such as is now employed by ladies in making worsted work. It is much gnawed away on one side and looks as if it may have been like an ordinary needle with a perforation, and this now rendered incomplete from the gnawing.

"Another implement is a fish-hook worked out of bone.

"Such bone implements are among the rarest of human relics in our portion of the country.

"Another remarkable relic is a cone shell bored through the axis as a bead. The shell is a marine species, Conus tornatus, found on the western coast of Central America. Its presence among the cave remains would indicate an extended intercourse among the inhabitants of early times."

CHAPTER VIII.

SMITHFIELD TOWNSHIP.[1]

ORGANIZATION AND DESCRIPTION OF THE TOWNSHIP.—As is well known to most readers of the local history of this region, Smithfield was the northernmost township of Bucks County. Its southern border was, as now, the Blue Mountain; its eastern, the Delaware River; while on the north and west its jurisdiction extended as far as the temerity of the white man would permit him to penetrate into the wilderness.

The whole of the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink was at one time comprised in the territory of Smithfield.

Its topographical features are diversified and beautiful, even in its present circumscribed limits.

The valley lands are the result of alluvial deposits, possibly lacustrine in origin, and are arable to great depths, with a productive capacity resembling the prairies of the West. The larger portion is, however, broken, irregular and hilly. The characteristic natural features are the Blue Mountain, the Delaware River and the Delaware Water Gap (described elsewhere). The larger streams, besides the Delaware, are Brodhead Creek, which conveys the water from the Pocono Mountain to the Delaware, and passes through a wild, picturesque country before reaching Smithfield; with its tributaries it drains a large part of the area of the county. Marshall Creek enters Brodhead Creek a short distance before the latter reaches the Delaware. It is noted for its two pretty water-falls and for its apparently inexhaustible supply of brook trout. Cherry Creek is the other important stream in Smithfield. All of these are noted trout streams. Cherry Creek was named after Edward Cherry, or "Ned" Cherry, by which name the creek was known for some years. Cherry was one of the very early settlers of this portion of Smithfield before 1738. Marshall Creek is said to be named after Edward Marshall, the successful walker, or runner, in the "walking purchase." Brodhead Creek was named after Daniel Brodhead, who settled on the stream at East Stroudsburg in 1738. The Indian name was Analoming (now written Analomink). That portion of Brodhead Creek, from the junction of Marshall to the Delaware, is sometimes called Smithfield Creek. The Dutch in the Minisink do not seem to have adopted very readily the Indian names of the local streams, but chose rather to apply to each their own word "kill," or kil, for creek, leaving, as we may suppose, the descriptive part of the name to follow, as some characteristic of the stream suggested itself. But in a country where both land and streams are made to order, the greatest possible peculiarity a creek could present to the mind of a Hollander, would be to see it overgrown with trees and shrubs; hence, in going forth in the Minisink to take a survey of his newly-acquired "claim," and obtain a description, the phenomenon of the sparkling waters issuing from beneath the overhanging bushes, meets his eye, and readily the happy epithet rushes to his mind and finds expression "Bosch Kil!" (Bush Kill), and he eagerly makes the following note: "Bosch Kil empties into the Zuydt" (Delaware), and exclaims, "That is very good!" But he is destined to a more serious tax upon his imaginative powers. In the further exploration he comes upon another stream, with bushes to the right of it, bushes to the left of it and bushes all over it, and to find different names for two things possessing one and the same characteristic was puzzling indeed, and it is not to be wondered that he concluded it was about the time to sit down and take a smoke, with the hope, too, of soothing his perplexed brain. He rises after a rest and finds himself equal to the occasion, and proceeds at once to enter in his note-book, in good strong Dutch, the following memorandum: "A Bosch Kil empties into the Bosch Kil and the Bosch Kil empties into the Zuydt." And he hurriedly retraces his steps, not caring to encounter another bushy creek in the exhausted condition of his vocabulary.

A recent examination of some early title papers became quite puzzling in finding that what was subsequently called Brodhead Creek was then entitled "a Bush Kill," and its tributary, Marshall Creek, called in the same paper "another Bush Kill."

Following is a copy of the first petition of the inhabitants of Smithfield for the location of a township in 1746:

"In this petition for the organization of Smithfield, the subscribers ask that the line of the proposed township may go to the north corner of Christoff Denmark's plantation and from thence north a straight line to the River Delaware. The name of Christoff Denmark, Jr., appears as one of the signers. There is a creek in Lehman township, Pike County, called Denmark, on which it is supposed he lived. The petitioners ask that a north line may be drawn from this point to the Delaware. As the river makes a detour towards the west, this north line would have struck the Delaware somewhere near the mouth of the Lackawaxen, including all the Minisink on the Pennsylvania side of the river. But little is known of Christofell, or Christopher Denmark, Sr. It appears from the court records that he died about 1767, and that his children were Christopher and Barnabas. Their names do not appear after that date."

The following is a copy of the second petition (1748), which appears to have brought about the desired result:

The population in 1742 is stated to have been five hundred. In 1780 its taxables numbered two hundred and fifty, which shows a population of about twelve hundred and fifty. Of course the "poor Indian" was left out in this estimate.

It would be interesting to know just how the native population was regarded by the isolated settlers above the Blue Mountain at this period in its history. Without higher motives, policy would dictate that they should be treated generously and kindly for the security of the settlers, as for some years they must have been at the mercy of the Indians, who, for the time, greatly outnumbered the whites.

It would seem that many of the natives were either employed, or the younger members adopted, by the wealthier families. Nicholas De Pui seems to have had in his employ, or had care over, Indians and Indian boys named "Joseph," "James" and "Pammer"; Samuel De Pui provided for "Cobus," "Howpeek," "Arry," "Anthony the Great," "Poxino," etc.; James Hyndshaw, on the Bushkill, his Indian boy "Joo"; Benjamin Shoemaker, "James," etc. These all were names given as by adoption, and is evidence of almost paternal regard for the younger members of the tribe on the part of these early settlers, and it proves, too, that the Indians in the Minisink at that day were not of the character of those we hear of in the West at the present. The former were as we found them; the latter are as we have made them.

The Shawnees were a Southern tribe, invited here, it is said, by the Lenni Lenapes about 1680. They proved to be troublesome and annoying to their benefactors. They are spoken of by the Minsis as "the worst of Indians." We are led to wonder why the Indian town on the Delaware, and the large island opposite, in Smithfield, should have been named "Shawnee," —having evidently been so named by the Indians themselves—as the Shawnees were not at any time the dominant party in any portion of the Minisink.

For some years after the white settlers first came to this valley the degradation and suffering of its native people had not been realized to the extent felt in other portions of the country, though the transfer of their homes of the "stranger" had commenced even before the "Walking Purchase." They had escaped for a time, in this secluded valley, the devastating storm that was raging without, and found here a refuge and a home of comparative quiet, among those who had treated them humanely and in whom they confided. The continued peace and security which the early settlers also enjoyed in this valley, and particularly at this juncture, when the Indians were suffering so much on every hand by the intrigues of the whites and the cruelty of their enemies, is proof of the peaceable character of the Minsi Indians, and that they were inclined to deal justly and live fraternally with those who manifested a like disposition.

There is a small remnant of the Delawares still living in Western Kansas. The government recognizes them in their tribal relation, and continues to appropriate to them a small sum annually.

Early Settlements.—It is generally admitted that Nicholas De Pui was the first permanent resident of Smithfield and of the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink; that he located here in 1725, purchased a large body of land from the natives the second year after, and repurchased a portion of the same land of William Allen in 1733.

But the ubiquitous John Smith had a name here, if not "a local habitation," when these events were transpiring; whether he was here before anybody else, or only intended to be represented here before anybody else, is not ascertained.

It is at least certain that he had claim to land in the territory that has ever since born his familiar cognomen, and that the claim was recognized by William Allen in his first deed to Nicholas De Pui. The first tide of immigration into this valley flowed from the direction of the Hudson, entering the Delaware Valley at the mouth of the Mamakating and spreading throughout its borders. Previous to 1780 there were very few settlers here from any other direction. They made selection of the level lands along the river and in many instances their descendants occupy the original possessions.

The second wave, as it may be termed, set in from the South after 1780, bringing mainly descendants from the early settlers in Montgomery, Bucks and Northampton Counties. This class located in Cherry Valley and in the Valleys of Brodhead and Pocono Creeks. This immigration continued up to and after the year 1800.

(For further account of Smithfield, see Local Reminiscences).

All the early settlements made in the valley of the Minisink were by persons residing on the Hudson, in and about Esopes and New Paltz, and they were almost exclusively of low Dutch or Holland origin, and found their way into this valley by the old Mine road.

We have no certain account of any permanent settlement made in the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink earlier than that of Nicholas De Pui, in 1725. His two brothers, Abram and Ephraim, came at the same time and located in the New Jersey portion of the Minisink. Abram afterwards removed down the Delaware and purchased a property on the Pennsylvania side opposite Foul Reef, of whom Judge Depuy, of honorable eminence in New Jersey, is a descendant. What became of the enterprising Hollanders who penetrated this valley many years before, for mining purposes, at Pahaquarra, is not known ; it is thought that a few of these, with their families, remained, as there are well authenticated accounts of earlier settlements in the New Jersey Minisink than 1725. The Van Campens came about this date and were friends of the De Puis. The De Puis, however, were not of Holland, but of French origin.[1]

The intercourse of the people of this portion of the Delaware Valley was exclusively with their countrymen residing in towns along the Hudson, from which they had themselves emigrated. Their outlet was by the "old Mine" road, which commenced about three miles above the De Pui settlement, in New Jersey, where the mining operations were carried on, to the Hudson, a distance of one hundred miles. And they found this road very serviceable in enabling them to transport the surplus products of their farms to market by sleds in winter, and to bring from thence their needed supplies.

The mines appear to have been worked to a considerable extent. Two horizontal drifts of several hundred feet in length penetrate the side of the mountain, a few hundred feet above the river Delaware, with several smaller openings adjacent.

The mines are distant about eight miles from the Delaware Water Gap in Pahaquarra. This name is corrupted from the original Indian name of the Delaware Water Gap, "Pohoqualine," called also at different periods Pahqualine and Pahaqualia, meaning a river passing between two mountains.

Colonel Jacob Stroud is familiarly associated with the delightful town bearing his name. He was well known as an active, enterprising business man and figured prominently in the history of the times in which he lived.

He was born at Amwell, N. J., in 1735.[2]

In 1738 Daniel Brodhead purchased fifteen hundred acres of land extending from what was formerly known as the "Flower Garden," above Stroudsburg, to and including the "falls" and water-power now owned by William Wallace, and at this place Ephraim Culver built a gristmill in 1753, which was the second mill north of the mountain—the first being Depui's at Shawnee.

From the annals of the "Red Rose Inn" we learn that Ephraim Culver,[3] the sixth landlord

[1] See history of the family, postea.

[3] The descendants of Ephraim Culver have been employed from the begining of the century at the gun-factory of Jas.

in succession at that historic hostelry, late of Lower Smithfield, miller, but a native of Connecticut, born 30th July, 1717, in the town of Lebanon, was installed at this inn, as near as we can ascertain, about the time of the vernal equinox of 1759.

In 1753 he left Connecticut and removed with his family to Smithfield and settled upon a small glebe he had purchased of Daniel Brodhead. On this site, now the centre of the borough of Stroudsburg, he erected a grist-mill (its wheel was turned by the waters of McMichael's Creek) and looked forward, no doubt, to years of peaceful industry, and then retirement from business, and rest in the evening of life. But these prospects were rudely marred when Mr. Culver, on the 11th of December, 1755, saw a cloud of smoke ascending from the site of his home and mill, as he was fleeing with his wife and children from the destroying Indians. With others of his neighbors, Mr. Culver sought a friendly asylum at Nazareth. There ere long he united with the Moravians. Mr. Culver was tendered, in 1756, the position of landlord of the "Crown Inn," at Bethlehem.

The "Red Rose" was situated north of Nazareth, on the road to the Wind Gap.

The "Crown" was an inn of still greater historic celebrity, established at Bethlehem, in 1745.

On the same day that Mr. Culver's house and mill were burned many of the dwellings in the valley between the Lehigh and Delaware were laid in ashes and several of the inhabitants killed. Numbers fled to the Brodhead settlement at Dansbury (East Stroudsburg), where a united and determined effort was resolved upon to stay the further progress of the infuriated Indians. The main building was hastily fortified and filled with the wretched and homeless sufferers, and such arms as could be procured were placed in the hands of those who could use them effectually.

They were soon attacked by a party of savages, hitherto unresisted in their devastating march down the valley, numbering, according to different accounts, about two hundred warriors, who signaled their approach by firing barns, stacks of grain and everything else within their reach. The attack upon the fortified house was commenced on the afternoon of the day named, but the Indians were unable long to withstand the well-directed fire from the building and were forced to retire with severe loss of men

De Pui Family.—Nicholas De Pui was a Huguenot, and fled from France to Holland in the year 1685, when Louis XIV. exposed them to Papal vengeance by revoking the Edict of Nantes, an act of stupendous folly on the part of Louis, to say nothing of its inhumanity, for he thereby drove some of the best French artisans out of France into Holland and England, where they taught those nations how to manufacture certain articles which made them competitors with France in the markets of the world, and it may be truly said that every nation that received these refugees was made stronger and better thereby. Many of these exiles found a home in America; among them were Nicholas, Ephraim and Abraham De Puy, or De Pui, as it was originally written, who first fled to Holland and shortly after emigrated to America, and found their way up the Hudson to the Esopus. Ephraim located on the Hudson and Abraham located on the Pennsylvania side of the river, below Belvidere, and has numerous descendants, among them Judge David A. Depue, of New Jersey. Nicholas De Puy came to the Minisink in 1725, and was the first white settler in the Pennsylvania portion north of the Blue Mountain of whom there is any authentic account, and his deed from the Indians, dated September 18, 1727, for three thousand acres of land lying along the Delaware River north of the Water Gap, including the three islands Shawano, Manwallamink, and another small island, signed by the Indian chiefs Waugoanlennegea and Pemnogque, is the oldest documentary evidence of any settlement of the Minisink on the Pennsylvania side of the river. He was evidently a man of some wealth, and with the assistance of his slaves and his large family of children he was able to establish himself firmly and build up a home in the wilderness.

Henry, at Boulton, Northampton County, Pa. (See Stroud township.)

He cultivated the friendship of the Indians and they were his true friends. He obtained his title from these proud Lenni Lenapes, and they considered it a valid one, although there is no consideration mentioned in the Indian deed, and it is otherwise defective as a legal title, and yet it had been given in good faith by the Lenni Lenape, or Original people, as they called themselves, and they respected the title which they had given, and who does not sympathize with that spirit of independence which manifested itself some years later, when Nicholas Scull, the proprietaries' surveyor, was engaged in measuring off some of these same lands to Mr. De Pui, in order that he might obtain title to them through the proprietaries, when the Indians advised the surveyor to put up iron string and go home, which he did? This act is an evidence of good faith towards Mr. De Pui, and an assertion of original ownership on the part of the Indians which the proprietors could understand. The following is a copy of the original:

"INDIAN DEED TO NICHOLAS DEPUI.

"This indenture, made the 18th day of September, in the year of the reign of our Soverent Lord George the Second, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, defender of the faith, Anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and twenty-seven, Nicklas Depui, of Kizenick, in the county of Ulster, yeoman, of the one part, and Indian owners and possessors of the said tract of land hereafter of the other part, witnesseth that the said Indian owners, possessors of the said land aforesaid, for and in consideration of to them, the said Indian owners and possessors, well and Truly to them in hand paid by the said Nicklas Depui, at and before the ensealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt of which they, the said and every of them doe and doth, aquit, release and discharge the said Nichlas Depue, there heirs, executors and administrators and assigns, Have granted, bargained and sold, released and confirmed the said Nichlas Depue all the said tract of land lying in Pensalvena, in the county of Bucks, joining to Dellaway River, beginning by Peter Ribble on the south side of the land by the North of a creek and thereover, and runs up southwestly eighty chains; from thence Northwest so far as the top of the high mountains, and from thence all along the said mountains as the coast runs, so along till we come over against Peghgoquery, and thence with a south east line so as the river runs, including all the Islands and lowlands appertaining to the said tract of land belonging to the heirs of Sir William Pen, Containing Three Thousand Acres more or less, together with all the Intress, woods, timbers ande underwoods, with all and all other privileges and advantages whatsoever, all manner of mines, minerals and quarrys, pastures and privileges whatsoever; all these the said Indians and every of them, their rights and interests, property, claim of in the said tract of land belonging or in any manner of way appertaining, and reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders thereof, and of every pusell there of to have and the said tract of land hereby granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed, with these and every of these appertenances, unto the said Niclas Depue, their heirs and executors & admenstrator or assigns forever, free from any claim to be maid by us or any of us, or any other Indians whatsoever, and we will and ever warrant and forever defend the said Nichlas Depue, there heirs, executors, administrators and assigns in a quiet, peaceable possession thereof against all other Indian or Indians whatsoever.

"Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of us. WAUGOUNLENNEGGEA C. (Seal.) PEMNOGQUE V. (Seal.)

Notwithstanding this title from the Indians, which they considered good and which they were evidently ready to warrant and defend as they had agreed, Mr. De Pui acknowledged the title of the proprietaries and repurchased a good portion, if not all, of this land of William Allen,[1] of Philadelphia, who had patented ten thousand acres of land in the Minisink in 1727.

[1] The Allens occupy a distinguished place in the early history of Pennsylvania. Proud says, "William Allen was the son of William Allen, who died in Philadelphia in 1725. He had been an eminent merchant in the city and a considerable promoter of the trade of the province, a man of good character and estate." William Allen, the younger, had been appointed chief justice of the Supreme Court in 1750, a position which he held for many years. He enjoyed the friendship of the Penn family, and his daughter Ann married Governor John Penn. He speculated very extensively in lands, and by shrewd and careful methods secured an ample fortune. Secretary James Logan, writing to Thomas Penn, in England, says he "had a method of procuring a knowledge of the quality and worth of lands, which he effected by private arrangements he made with the surveyors who traversed the wild lands, . . . to whom he gave douceurs; in this manner he became the wealthiest of the land speculators, as persons desirous of purchasing good tracts would purchase of him in preference to all others." Judge Allen had married one of the daughters of Andrew Hamilton, a former Deputy Governor under William Penn. He had three sons,—Andrew, James and William.

Mr. Depui rented of Allen for a few years, and in 1733 he commenced to purchase of him. During that year he purchased one tract of four hundred and twenty-six acres for fifty pounds; the three islands,—Manwallamink, containing one hundred and twenty-six acres; the Great Shawna, containing one hundred and forty-six acres; and a small island over which the railroad now passes, containing about thirty acres, for four hundred pounds. He also bought another tract containing two hundred and thirty-two acres the same year, and by further purchases in the years following he acquired a large property along the Delaware above and below Shawnee, nearly all of it being fertile river flats. He built a large house and planted an apple orchard and also built a grist-mill, which is mentioned as reserved to Moses Depui, his son, in a deed dated 1743. He cultivated the flats and adjacent islands and lived like a prince among the aborigines. "Few communities can lay claim to a family of greater worth and respectability, and fewer still can witness a reputation such as this family possessed, maintained untarnished for five successive generations. For nearly half a century Mr. Depui and other members of his family continued in undisturbed friendship with the Indians of the Minisink, and after the main body of the tribe were exiled, the few who fondly lingered until the outbreak of 1755—when they were hunted like wild beasts of the forest—ever found a generous welcome at his door."[1] According to Nicholas Depui's will, made in the year 1745, his sons were Moses, Aaron, Samuel and Daniel, and the daughters are Cathrina, Susanna, Magdalena, Johanna and Elizabeth. Cathrina Rosenkrans deceased before that time, and her children—Hendrikus, Harnod, Garret, Benjamin and Moses—are provided for in the will. Of these sons, Samuel Depui retained the homestead, and during the war his house was stockaded and a swivel gun mounted at each corner, and was called Depui's Fort. "The son, like his father before him, had no fear of the Indians, living among them in peace and security until the French began to exert a wicked influence upon them, when Depui became alarmed, and he and his neighbors asked for colonial help. These calls, which afterward became frequent, were always respected and help came, Depui invariably assuring the government that he had abundant provision to keep the men." And it is recorded that in all the public life of the original Depui reported by various officials of the colony only one charge was found by the commissary-general. They doubtless considered the assured safety to life and property against the depredations of the Indians a full remuneration for keeping the men. Samuel Depui was a very powerful man. A characteristic anecdote is told of him in connection with John Reading, who revived the old mine just across the river from Depui's, although it proved to be a poor speculation for investors. Reading became provincial Governor of New Jersey. He and Depui were warm friends. One day Reading was telling him of the trouble he had with a negro servant. The negro was a strong man and knew it. Whenever any one wanted him to do anything he would say, "Well, now, if you are stronger than I am, I will do it; suppose we try strength and see who shall do the work." In this way he managed to do about as little as he pleased. Depui said, "Send him to me." The negro was sent. Depui set him to do some work near the river, and the negro commenced in his old way: "If you are stronger than I am, I will serve you; if not, we'll see." Depui threw him down the side-hill about twenty feet and followed him up with a kick, and was about to throw him into the Delaware when the African cried, "Hold, hold, sir; I knock under!" and became after that an obedient and trusty servant.

Samuel Depui received a few years after an injury which shortened his life. One day, as he and some others were shoving a Durham boat up the Delaware, it stuck on a reef, and two men were trying to shove it off, when Depui stepped forward and took a pole, saying that he could shove it off alone. As he was making the effort the pole broke and he fell forward on the pole with such force that it penetrated his side and wounded him severely. He lived for a number of years, but was never well again.

[1] Delaware Water Gap, by L. W. Brodhead.

Nicholas (2d) son of Samuel, built the stone house which is now standing at Shawnee in 1785. Robert R. De Puy, of Stroudsburg, is the owner of the old estate at this time. His father was Nicholas (3d) son of Nicholas (2d). Moses Depui, who, from the order in which they are mentioned in the will, appears to have been the eldest son of Nicholas Depui, and was the owner of the grist-mill, as appears from deeds in 1743. In 1747 he was appointed a magistrate. In Hubbard's "Life of Major Moses Van Campen" the following occurs concerning him:

"He was distinguished for an exemplary religious character as well as for kindness and liberality to the poor. He acted for a number of years as justice of the peace and in the discharge of his office he seemed more like a father consulting and settling the differences of a large family than like the generality of those who administer justice. He never would allow a suit between any of his neighbors to come to issue before him, but in almost every instance effected a reconciliation between the parties without going through the expensive and, in too many instances, painful steps of a lawsuit."

"The De Puis were not of Holland, but French origin. The family fled from France, it has been generally supposed, on account of the persecutions following the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in 1685, and came to America about that time; but we find in the list of early immigrants to New Netherland (New York) the following: 'Oct., 1662, in the ship "Pemberton Church" Nicholas Du Pui, from Artois, and wife and three children,' and in the list of patents granted by the Dutch government of New York from 1630 to 1664, one to Nicholaes De Puis for a plantation on Staten Island on the 19th March, 1663; also, as appears by an abstract of the will of Nicholas De Puis, of New York, dated Oct. 13th, 1685. These together will show that the family came to this country at a much earlier period than is generally supposed."[1]

The Van Campen Family.—John Arenson Van Campen arrived in New York, June 19, 1658, in the ship "Brown Fish" according to Dutch doc., vol. viii. p. 408, Albany. "Claus" Nicholas Van Campen, called "a farmer's boy," came from Holland on board the ship "Faith" in 1662. Dutch doc., vol. viii. pp. 408 to 412, show the passage of his wife Gretchen, (Grace), who came with their son, and the passage was remitted on account of the military services of John A. Van Campen. In 1692, John Van Campen petitioned for land for himself and military company on Shawangunk Creek. This was probably John A. Van Campen, who came to America in 1658. In the year 1700, in Colonel Jacob Rutson's regiment, and Captain Joachim Schoonmaker's company of one hundred and fifty-five men from Dutchess and Ulster Counties, Lieutenant John Van Campen's name appears. George Van Campen of Olean, New York, from whom these facts were obtained, thinks that this was a son of John A. Van Campen's. Dutchess was divided from Ulster in 1713. Ulster then comprised all of the land west of the Hudson to the Delaware. In 1728, John Van Campen was a freeholder in Marbletown, Ulster County, and in 1737, Jacob Van Campen was in the list of freeholders in Dutchess County. In 1726, John Van Campen had a lawsuit with John Conrad Weiser about obtaining an Indian title to land west of the Delaware, from a point then known as Pionpock to a point opposite Van Campen's Island. Cornelius Van Campen is mentioned as a corporal, in 1738, in a militia company in Ulster County, N. Y. Moses, John, Benjamin and Cornelius Depui are also mentioned in the list of troops. In 1761, Cornelius Van Campen, Aaron Van Campen and Benjamin Van Campen are assessed in Smithfield township, Northampton County. Garret Van Campen's name appears among the residents in 1777, and John, Moses and Abram Van Campen's names appear as early as 1778. Among the slave-holders in Smithfield in 1780 was John Van Campen, who owned four slaves, and Benjamin Van Campen, who had five slaves. "At a meeting held in Philadelphia, Saturday, March 3, 1770, at which the Hon. John Penn, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor etc., William Logan, Richard Peters, Benjamin Chew and James Tilghman,

[1] From Historical Notes of the Minisink, by L. W. Brodhead.

Esquires, were present, the Board after having considered the present state of the intrusion and settlements made by the Connecticut people on the proprietary lands within this province (at Wyoming), were of the opinion that if two prudent persons, living in the north part of Northampton County were immediately vested with the authority of magistrates, it would greatly conduce to the preservation of peace and better execution of the order of government from time to time, in defeating the measures of those people and checking the progress of their scheme of settlement on the lands at Wyoming and on the Delawere.

"The Governor therefore, on the recommendation of the members of the Council present, issued two special commissions, appointing Garret Brodhead and Van Campen, Esquires, justices of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace and the County Court of Common Pleas for the county of Northampton." This John Van Campen was a son of Colonel Abram Van Campen, of Pahaquarry. He actively espoused the cause of the Pennamites in the Connecticut troubles, and was in frequent correspondence with President Reed during the Revolution. He lived in the stone house which stood in Shawnee, where George V. Bush afterwards located; the latter, with Benjamin V. Bush, Esq., were his grandsons. Colonel Abram Van Campen, father of the above-mentioned John Van Campen, came to the Minisink about the same time that Nicholas Depui did, and purchased a large body of land in what is now called Pahaquarra (Pahaqualine), on the opposite side of the Delaware, five miles above Nicholas Depui's. He was prominent in defending the frontier, which was then along the Delaware, in 1755, during the French and Indian War, and was one of the first judges of Sussex County, New Jersey, which embraced a portion of the Minisink, and was organized November 20, 1753. He and his associates were appointed, by order of His Majesty, King George II., and commissioned judges of the Pleas, with power likewise to act as justices of the peace. The Van Campens were tall, noble-looking men and were always an influential and highly respectable family. Abram Van Campen married Miss Jennins and had four sons,—Benjamin, Moses, Abram and John. Benjamin died young. Abram married Miss Cape, of Philadelphia, and their children were Moses, Andrew, Mary, Maria, John and James. Of these children, Moses, married Miss Overfield and their children were William, Jacob, Benjamin, Susan and Sarah, wife of Moses Shoemaker.

Andrew Van Campen married Miss Michaels; their children were Mary, Sally, John, James, George. Maria Van Campen was the wife of John Nyce. John married Miss Pipher; their children were Mary, Sarah and John. James married Miss Pipher, and their children were Andrew, Frank, James and John. Moses Shoemaker's children were Moses, Andrew and Mary. John Van Campen, of the original family, married Sarah Depui. They had one son, Abram, and three daughters,—Mary, Blandina and Susanna. Abram married Sarah Dewitt. They had two daughters,—Susan, whose first husband was Solferyne Westbrook, and second husband was William Dusenbury, of Sandyston, N. J., opposite Dingman's Ferry; and Catharine, wife of Robert T. Green, and brother of Dr. Trail Green, of Lafayette College, of Easton Pa. Mary Van Campen was the wife of George Bush, of Shawnee. Blandina was the wife of Henry Shoemaker, of Pahaquarra, and Susanna was the wife of Judge John Coolbaugh, who was the son of William Coolbaugh, who came from Germany. He was a sea-captain and well educated. He came to Smithfield from Kingwood, Hunterdon County, N. J. His wife was Sarah Johnson; both of them are buried at Shawnee. Of their ten children, Cornelius and John were all that remained in Smithfield. John Coolbaugh who married Susanna Van Campen, was associate judge of Pike County twenty-two years, and his descendants are among the prominent men of Monroe County. Of Moses, son of Cornelius Van Campen, who probably married a sister of Nicholas Depui's, we have the following account:

Cornelius Van Campen[1] came from Holland and settled in New Jersey. He married a Depui (Depee or Depue, according to some records), and soon after the birth, on January 21, 1757, of their first son, Moses Van Campen (who became an officer in the Revolutionary army and a celebrated border adventurer during the exciting times before, during and after the war for independence), they removed to the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware and settled a little above the Water Gap. In 1769 Cornelius Van Campen took his son, Moses, and went to the Wyoming region, where he had purchased a fine tract of land under the Pennsylvania title. The constant turmoil arising from the contested title to the Wyoming was, however, distasteful to him, and relinquishing, temporarily, the idea of cultivating the beautiful land, and having in the mean time sold his farm on the Delaware, he removed, in 1773, with his entire family, to the west branch of the Susquehanna, in Northumberland County. While living here Moses Van Campen went with Colonel Plunket's force of Pennsylvanians to drive the Connecticut party from the valley of the Wyoming. In 1776 he was presented with the office of ensign in Colonel Cook's regiment, raised chiefly in Northumberland County, to join the Continental army under Washington, but was with some others induced to remain upon the frontier by James McClure, one of the County Committee of Safety, who knew that he was familiar with the woods and the ways of the Indians, who, it was foreseen, would prove most stealthy foes. He served very effectually as a frontiersman; built a fort on Fishing Creek, where he was several times attacked by the Indians; went through the whole of the bloody Wyoming campaign; was with Sullivan in his famous march and subsequent movements; was captured by the Indians in 1780, but made his escape, and subsequently entered the Continental service, in which he soon became a lieutenant and performed important duty throughout the Susquehanna region.

In 1782 he was again captured by the Indians, narrowly escape execution, but was taken finally to Montreal and paroled. In the spring of 1783 he was again active in the defence of the border, and was made commander of Wilkes-Barre Fort. After the close of the war he married a daughter of James McClure, and in 1795 removed to Allegheny County, N. Y., where he practiced the art of surveying which he had learned in his youth. He carried on a large land business; was appointed one of the judges of the county; was its treasurer for fifteen years, and commissioner of loans from 1808 until he removed from the county to Dansville, N. Y., in 1831. He died there upwards of eighty-five years of age. Such, in brief, was the life of one of Pennsylvania's bravest patriots and frontiersmen.

Brodhead Family.—The ancestor of the Brodhead family is said to have come from Germany to England and to have settled at Royston, in Yorkshire, in the reign of Henry VIII. On February 28, 1610, King James I. granted the manor of Burton or Monk Britton, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, to John Brodhead and George Wood, the principal freeholders of that place.

Daniel Brodhead, grand-nephew of John, the above-named grantee, was the ancestor of those who bear the name in the United States. He was born in Yorkshire, married Ann Tye, was an officer in the army of King Charles II. and accompanied the expedition of Colonel Nicolls from England in 1664. He was appointed commander-in-chief of the military forces at Kingston, September 14, 1665, where he remained till his death, July 14, 1667. He had three sons,—Daniel, Charles and Richard.

Daniel, son of Richard, was born at Marbletown, N. Y., in 1693, married Hester Wyngart, moved to Pennsylvania in 1738 and settled on the stream since bearing his name, upon land acquired some two years before from the proprietaries of the province, apparently for service rendered, comprising one thousand acres. It embraced the present town of East Stroudsburg, and an additional purchase of five hundred acres extended the area to Wallace's Mill Dam, on McMichael Creek. This property was known locally as the "Brodhead Manor" and the settlement at Dansbury, being in the several divisions of counties, first in Bucks, then in Northampton and now in Monroe. On September 25, 1747, he was commissioned one of the justices of the peace for the portion of Bucks County north of the "Blue Hills," which he held for the rest of his life. The authorities of the province considered it a necessity to have a magistrate there to watch, report and, as far as possible, thwart the Connecticut emigrants, who were at that time preparing to assert their claim to Wyoming, and he is said to have performed this service with zeal and ability. At the organization of Northampton County, in 1752, Mr. Brodhead was re-apppointed justice and at the same time Aaron Depui and John Vanetta, for Smithfield and Middle Smithfield.

At the period of this settlement (1738) nearly all the country north of the mountain was a wilderness; the nearest neighbors were the Dupuis, on the Delaware River, at Shawnee, three miles above the Water Gap. The Indians inhabiting the locality were known as the Minsis, called also Munseys, and known more particularly by the whites—with other tribes on the same stream—as Delawares. With these Indians Daniel Brodhead appears to have been on friendly terms and desired to aid in promoting their civilization. He became acquainted with such of the Moravian missionaries who, on their way from Bethlehem to and from their mission stations (extending as far as Shecomeka, in Dutchess County, N. Y.), often lodged at his house and enjoyed the rest and hospitality so much needed after these long and tiresome journeys through a wilderness country. He was ever their friend, and induced them to establish an Indian mission at his place, and he erected a suitable building for the purpose. It was situated on the west bank of the creek, near the present iron bridge, and was the second church building north of the mountain.

Daniel Brodhead died at Bethlehem (whither he had gone for medical treatment) on July 22, 1755. Some of his children were educated at Bethlehem. His son John was a pupil there in 1752.

This portion of the genealogy of this family is given to show their identity with the early history of this part of the State up to and including the period of the Revolution; those who figured therein and others in whose lives there are incidents of historical or general interest, are mentioned in the following notes.

The four succeeding generations of the family are scattered over the Union. Tracing the genealogy farther is not a legitimate part of this history.

Charles Brodhead, the eldest son of Daniel, of the fourth generation, in company with Aaron Depui and Benjamin Shoemaker, was intrusted by Governor Morris with a commission of a difficult nature, that is, to invite the Indians of Wyoming to a conference at Harris, (Harrisburg) with a view to a treaty, and to take charge of and accompany them to that place. The other gentleman named being unable to attend, Mr. Brodhead undertook the mission alone. He twice visited the Indians at Wyoming, once on the 9th of November, 1755, and again in December following. It was during this last visit, or in the same month, that the Indians made the attack upon the paternal home at East Stroudsburg (elsewhere related).

On the 29th of April, 1756, Charles Brodhead entered the provincial service as ensign, and on the 15th of March, 1758, was commissioned lieutenant in the Augusta Regiment, Colonel Claphan commanding, and was stationed at Fort Augusta (Shamokin). He was on the first jury at the organization of Northampton County, in 1752. He afterwards removed to Ulster County, N. Y. Charles was the father of the Hon. John C. Brodhead, member of Congress from New York.

Garret Brodhead, the second son of Daniel of the fourth generation, was a short time in the Revolutionary army, in a New Jersey regiment. All the other brothers being in the service, he was required at home to attend to the large property left by his father. He was appointed magistrate in 1770, and held the office for many years. He died in 1804.

Daniel Brodhead, the third son of Daniel of the fourth generation, was in 1773 appointed deputy surveyor-general under John Lukens. In the summer of 1776 he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, and on the 4th of July of that year was ordered by the Committee of Safety of Philadelphia "to proceed with one battalion of five hundred riflemen to Bordentown, N. J., to be employed agreeable to a requisition of the Honorable Continental Congress." He was in most of the battles fought by Washington's army till 1778, when, being colonel of the Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment, he was transferred by General Washington to the command of the Western Department, with his headquarters at Fort Pitt, where he remained till nearly the close of the war. His command in this department was one constant struggle with the Indian allies of Great Britain, extending along the whole frontier, and the results were so satisfactory as to receive the approval of Congress by special resolution. He received the appointment of general before the close of the war. The Indians being finally subdued and discouraged, thousands of soldiers and frontier citizens were free to join the Continental army, and the glorious triumph soon followed. At the close of the war General Brodhead was appointed surveyor-general of Pennsylvania, November 8, 1789. He died at Milford, Pa., November 15, 1809. His son Daniel was appointed lieutenant in Colonel Shee's battalion, January, 1776. He married for his second wife, General Mifflin's widow. His daughter, Ann Garten, was baptized by Rev. J. H. Goetchius, Mr. Fryenmuth's successor in Smithfield, on February 12, 1758.

John Brodhead, the fourth son of Daniel in the fourth generation. Of John there are no facts at hand other than the simple statement that he was a captain in the Continental army and removed to the State of New York, but the time is not ascertained.

Luke Brodhead, the sixth and youngest son of Daniel of the fourth generation, was in every sense a patriot. At the outbreak of the Revolution, he felt that the full measure of his services were due to his country, and he was impatient to volunteer the extent of that service without waiting, by advice of his friends, the tender of a commission. He entered the first American Rifle Regiment, commanded by Colonel William Thompson, which marched direct to Boston, where he distinguished himself, as on other occasions, as a brave soldier. He was commissioned a lieutenant in the rifle regiment commanded by Colonel Samuel Miles, and was severely wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Long Island. During this imprisonment he suffered great hardship in the sugar-house and prison-ships at New York, but he was not forgotten by his country. John Hancock commissioned him a captain in the Sixth Pennsylvania Regiment, commanded by Colonel Magaw. Captain Brodhead participated in the battles of Short Hills, Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, etc.

But the wounds received at Long Island, and the suffering endured in prison, so impaired his health that, though he received the commission of colonel on the day that his brother Daniel received his as general, he was obliged to quit the service and retire to his family. He was the intimate friend of Lafayette, to whom he was much attached. He was appointed a magistrate in the disputed district of Wyoming, but did not go there to reside.

Colonel Miles, in his autobiography, speaking of the battle of Long Island, says: "We took Major Moncreiff, their commanding officer, prisoner; but he was a Scotch prize to Ensign Brodhead, who took him and had him in possession several hours, but was obliged to surrender himself." Captain Brodhead continued to suffer from his wounds for the remainder of his life, and died at Stroudsburg June 19, 1806. He was the first child baptized by Rev. John Casparus Fryenmuth, the Dutch Reformed clergyman, in Smithfield, which occurred May 22, 1741. Peter Casay and Anna Prys were his sponsors.

John Brodhead, son of Garret of the fifth generation, was born March 3, 1776, died September 5, 1821. He was the first clerk of the courts, prothonotary and register and recorder on the organization of Wayne County, September 10, 1798. The court was held first at Milford, the present shire-town of Pike County. Studied surveying under Col. William Wills, of Smithfield, and received the certificate March 27, 1792. Elected to the Legislature about 1812. He was the father of Daniel M. (married Eliza Barton), John H. (married Louisa Ross), William F. (married Jane Dingman), George W. (married H. Dougherty) and Henry R. (married Emily Stull). The Rev. Augustus Brodhead, D.D., for twenty years missionary in India, and now a pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Bridgeton, N. J., is a son of John H., above named. Mrs. Senator Van Wyck is a daughter of John H. The account of this branch of the family belongs, more particularly, to Pike County.

Richard Brodhead, son of Garret of the fifth generation, was most of his life a resident of Pike County, and is spoken of in that connection, as also his sons herein named. He was the father of Sarah, who married the Hon. John Westbrook; Garret, who married Cornelia Dingman; William, who married Susan Coolbaugh; Jane, who married Moses S. Brundage; Albert Gallatin, who married Ellen Middaugh; Charles, who married Mary Brown; Anna Maria, who married John Seaman; Rachel, who married John J. Linderman, M.D.; and Richard, who married Mary Jane Bradford.

Richard Brodhead, the youngest of the above family, was educated at Easton, and studied law there. He was elected to the Legislature soon after his admission to the bar; was member of Congress and United States Senator.

Dr. Francis Joseph Smith, who married Elizabeth Brodhead of the fifth generation, was a political refugee from France and a man of decided ability. His real name was J. J. Aerts. The assumed name was for political reasons.

Thomas Brodhead, M.D., of the fifth generation, was born at Dansbury (East Stroudsburg), in 1765. He went to Ulster County, New York, when a young man, and studied medicine with Dr. Oliver. He was an eminent physician and acquired a large fortune in his practice. Died November 11, 1830.

John Brodhead, D.D., of the fifth generation was also born at East Stroudsburg, October 5, 1770. In his twenty-second year, after hearing a powerful discourse from a Methodist itinerant, he returned home, retired to the barn to meditate and pray. After his conversion he entered the itinerant field in 1794 in his twenty-fourth year, and was appointed to Northumberland Circuit in this State. The next year he was transferred to New England. He was forty-four years in the ministry, four years a member of Congress from New Hampshire and for a number of years member of the State Senate. He was Senator and acting as chaplain at the time General Lafayette visited that place.

When Governor Morrill introduced him to Lafayette, Dr. Brodhead inquired if he remembered Captain Luke Brodhead. "What, Captain Brodhead of the Pennsylvania line? Certainly, I knew him well." Dr. Brodhead replied: "He was my father." "My dear sir," continued the general, "how glad I am to see you! Your father was a brave man. It cheers my heart to find that the sons of my comrades in arms still love me."

Dr. Brodhead was the father of Daniel, who was navy agent at Boston in 1854; of Dr. John M., second comptroller at Washington for many years; of George H., president of the Board of Brokers in 1874 and Secretary for many years before; of Thornton F., colonel of the First Michigan cavalry during the Rebellion, and was killed at the second Bull Run battle, September 2, 1862; and of Jonah A., who entered the army of the Rebellion at the commencement of the war and continued till the close, appointed lieutenant-colonel and paymaster at the end of the war.

Luke Brodhead, also of the fifth generation, was born at East Stroudsburg. He was the honored and beloved ancestor of those of the name who reside at the Delaware Water Gap.

New York Branch.—It is designed, in this connection, to speak only of such of the New York branch as have been in public life, and the nature of which will appear of interest to the general reader.

Charles Brodhead, of the second generation, married Maria Ten Brook. From him are descended Professor Lewis Brodhead, of Rutgers (formerly Queen's) College, and Charles W. Brodhead, who was a captain in the army of the Revolution and commanded a company of grenadiers, which he raised and equipped mainly at his own expense, and was present, under General Gates, at the surrender of General Burgoyne, at Saratoga.

He died September 21, 1799. His sister Elizabeth married Theodoric Romeyn, D.D., a distinguished Dutch Reformed clergyman and founder of Union College (1744–1806). Dr. Romeyn's son, John Brodhead Romeyn, D.D. (1770–1825), preceded Rev. Jacob Brodhead in the pastoral charge of the church at Rhinebeck, and for several years was pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Cedar Street, New York. Dr. Romeyn preached the funeral sermon of Alexander Hamilton, in 1804, from the text, "How are the mighty fallen!" A marble tablet, bearing his name, is placed in the wall of Dr. John Hall's church, Fifth Avenue, New York.

Jacob Brodhead, D.D., was also a descendant of Charles, first above named (1782–1855). He studied languages under Rev. Abram Van Horn, of Rochester, commencing at twelve years of age. He was sent to Schenectady, under care of his uncle, Dr. Romeyn. He entered the junior class in Union College in 1799, and graduated in 1801. He pursued his theological studies under Dr. Romeyn. He was called first to the Dutch Reformed Church at Rhinebeck, in 1804. He married Eliza Bleeker, of Albany, the same year. In 1809 he received a call from the Collegiate Reformed Church in New York, where he remained till 1813. In the summer of that year he accepted a call from the Crown Street Church, in Philadelphia, where he remained thirteen years. His next call was to the Reformed Dutch Church in Broom Street, New York, where he remained till 1837. His pastoral work was suspended for several years on account of ill health, but he continued to preach at intervals till his death, in 1855.

Governor Tompkins appointed Dr. Brodhead chaplain of the Third Regiment New York State Artillery in the War of 1812, and, while stationed at Philadelphia, he worked several weeks on trenches thrown up for the defence of the city, and one of the redoubts was called after him, Fort Brodhead.

John Romeyn Brodhead, the historian, was a son of the Rev. Jacob Brodhead. He graduated at Rutgers College in 1831; studied law with the late Hugh Maxwell; admitted to the bar in 1835. Attached to the United States Legation at the Hague, in 1839, under commission from Governor Seward, of New York, in 1841, he spent three years in Holland collecting materials for the "History of New York," and brought home, in 1844, a collection of over five thousand separate papers, which the Hon. George Bancroft, after careful examination, pronounced the most valuable collection of material for American history ever brought across the Atlantic.

Mr. Brodhead was secretary of legation under Mr. Bancroft as minister to England, from 1846 to 1849. From 1853 to 1857 he was naval officer at the port of New York. As State historian, he published two volumes of the "History of New York," but left the remaining volume unfinished at his death. He was born in Philadelphia January 2, 1814; died in New York in 1873.[1]

Recollections of Peter Zimmerman and Others.—John George Zimmerman came from Berks County to Smithfield and purchased a property of Daniel Shoemaker, in 1802, consisting of a farm and a grist and saw-mill located on Marshall's Creek, at what is now known as Branchville. The grist-mill stood about one hundred and thirty yards from the present mill and had two run of stone. In 1815 he took the old mill down and built the present stone grist-mill, with three run of stone. Mr. Zimmerman was a practical miller and his mill, as rebuilt, was the best in the vicinity, and received patronage from Smithfield, Middle Smithfield, Price, Stroud and Mount Pleasant township, in Northampton. There was an old grist-mill at Shawnee and another at Stroudsburg at this time. J. G. Zimmerman owed five hundred and sixty acres of land, and carried on milling and farming until he died, in 1827, when his business was continued by his family, consisting of fourteen children, twelve of whom grew up to manhood and womanhood. Isaac and George had managed a store in connection with the milling business. The hillsides at that time were covered with a fine growth of oak timber, and the farmers, in winter, made large quantities of oak staves, heads and hoops for barrels and firkins, which the early merchants took in exchange for goods and shipped down the Delaware to Philadelphia on rafts. The Zimmerman Brothers some years shipped a million staves and heads, and sometimes glutted the market. Isaac and George were both unmarried and died aged about fifty-two. George was an excellent miller. Peter bought his interest and continued to run the mill until he sold it to Heller & Smoyer, the present owners, in 1866. They have added another story and put in four run of stone.

Daniel Zimmerman, the third son, was a miller and storekeeper, and lived to be eighty-six years of age. Henry and Joseph were merchants and farmers. Peter Zimmerman, now aged eighty-two, has been a miller sixty-eight years, a business in which he excels. After selling the old mill, he built, in 1852, another grist-mill one hundred yards farther up Marshall Creek, with four run of stone, which was sold to Lantz & Phifer in 1875–76, when, farther up the creek, he built, in 1878, another grist-mill with three run of stone, which he now owns. Besides these two grist-mills, he has built two saw-mills, the Cataract House (which will accommodate about forty guests), several dwelling-houses and barns. There had formerly been tanneries at the upper and lower falls. George McEwing built a tannery at the upper falls and continued tanning until 1860. Francis J. Ervin had a tannery at the lower falls, which was built in 1831. Ulrich Hauser lived about one-half mile northeast of Mr. Zimmerman. He kept a tavern, afterwards owned by his son John. Peter and Joseph were the other sons. Joseph Hauser married Colonel Vannier's daughter, and with her obtained the property now occupied by the Water Cure.

George Michaels and his sons John and George removed to Middle Smithfield in 1794 from a place called Drylands, near Nazareth. They purchased nine hundred acres of land. Peter, the oldest son, came the following year. John Michaels, who is nearly ninety-three and lives across the river in Pahaquarry, says: "My father built a stone house where Frank H. Smith now resides. They cleared the upland, the lowland being already cleared. My father first built a frame house, the next house above him being my Uncle John's, his son George, aged eighty-six, now occupying it. The next dwelling above was Uncle Peter's. He lived in a log house, his son Samuel having built the present brick house. He had a family of sixteen children, fourteen of whom survived. One of these sons, Peter, has the place at present. John De Witt, Jacob De Witt and others of that name lived above the Michaels. Henry Strunk was adjoining my father's (George Michaels, Jr.), on the south. He came from the lower part of the State about 1800. Strunk's sons were Henry, who retained the homestead; Peter, who also lived on part of the homestead; and George, who was at Shawnee. Andrew Strunk, one of Henry Strunk, Jr.'s, sons, lives on the old Daniel La Bar place. The first farm after crossing the line into Smithfield is that of George Ehes, or Ace, who bought his land of William Place. It was afterward sold to Daniel Brown, and is now owned by his son John. The next farm was that of the well-known farmer, Peter Treible. He and his wife came from the lower part of the State on horseback, carrying their oldest child in their arms. Peter Treible had married a daughter of George Meyers, and assumed charge of his father-in-law's farm. He first lived in a log house, and afterward built a stone dwelling and kept tavern and had a post-office, called Treibleville, at his house. He was a good farmer and a man of some education. Of his eleven children, John retained the homestead, Henry lived on the hill above, and Jacob below Shawnee. George Walters had a log house on the road between the La Bar and Treible place in the year 1800. One of his sons, Michael, built a stone house south of the Daniel La Bar place, where he now resides, aged nearly ninety."

Peter Zimmerman says: "John V. Bush's was the next place after passing Michael Walters' to the south, and near it was the old De Puy place. George Bush also lived at Shawnee, where Hiram La Bar now resides. There was no one living between Shawnee and my father's, at Branchville, in 1812. Adam Smith was the first blacksmith that I recall. He lived about one-half mile east of East Stroudsburg, where Philip Smith now is located. I knew Captain Turn. He and Captain Dietrick were captains of two companies of drafted men in the War of 1812.

"Philip Schrader was a captain in the Revolutionary War. He led a company of militia from Smithfield against the Connecticut settlers at Wyoming in 1784. He was the first storekeeper in Shawnee, from 1797 to 1816. He was also a land speculator, had a good education and, it was said, was master of several languages. A Presbyterian by the name of Deal, who preached in New Jersey, occasionally officiated in Shawnee. Old Captain Schrader, who was shrewd in an argument, would keep the preachers and draw them into discussions and arguments.

"Jacob, Elias and John Transue, brothers, all lived in Smithfield. Jacob Transue, Esq., was on the hills, about two and one-half miles from Shawnee. He was the only justice of the peace for a great distance when the territory was Northampton County. His son Isaac was justice of the peace after him. Elias Transue lived about one mile northeast of Shawnee, on Mosier or Transue Knob. It is one of the highest points in the county, and affords a very extended view. He raised a large family, and many of his descendants are still in this region. John Transue lived north of the home of Elias. His sons were Abram, who was in Pocono township; Jacob, who lived near Buttermilk Falls; and John, who retained the homestead and attained his eighty-fourth year. Frank Transue, a school-teacher, has the homestead, and Isaac R. Transue keeps a boarding-house at Shawnee." Mr. Zimmerman remembers the Fishes, who were an old family. "John Fish was a farmer and tanner, and weighed two hundred and fifty pounds. Abner and Eleazer were laborers on farms. They had large families." Peter Landers was a tavern-keeper, farmer and justice of the peace. His son John went to Phillipsburg and has become rich.

Old Captain Schrader built a stone storehouse at Shawnee in 1810, and engaged in the mercantile business for a number of years. After his death there was for some time no store in Shawnee. In 1840 Charles R. and Joseph V. Wilson bought the Schrader estate, in what was then called Bushtown, and began storekeeping in the same building that Schrader had occupied. Soon after a post-office was established, which they called Shawnee, with a weekly mail from Stroudsburg to Bushkill, the other offices being at Peter Treible's and John Turn's. They purchased and refitted the old De Puy grist-mill at Shawnee. After the death of Joseph V. Wilson, in 1856, Charles R. Wilson continued the business for a short time, when Stokes & Dreher managed it for two years, after which store-keeping was discontinued in the stone building. Meanwhile Samuel Dietrick built a store-house directly opposite Wilson's and Heller & Walker placed in it a stock of goods. J. D. La Bar bought Walker's interest and with Heller established the store where La Bar is now located. In 1859 A. D. Freece purchased the Dietrick building and engaged in mercantile business for twenty-two years. The Wilson brothers were energetic business men, having also a store in Stroudsburg. Joseph V. Wilson was one of the first elders and founders of the Presbyterian Church in Stroudsburg.

THE DELAWARE RIVER.—The Delaware River takes its rise about one hundred and ninety miles nearly directly north of the Delaware Water Gap. In a depression on the west side of the Catskill Mountain lies a secluded little sheet of transparent water, retaining its euphonic Indian name, "Utsayantha." The lake is elevated eighteen hundred and eighty-eight feet above tide-water, and from its outlet the Mohock, or main branch of the Delaware River, takes its departure to the ocean. The surroundings of Lake Utsayantha are said to be very wild and picturesque, and in itself is a mirror of beauty in a wilderness of woods, so secluded that it would seem that few, save the red men, have ever gazed upon it in its solitary serenity.

From its source the stream flows in a westwardly direction to Deposit, a distance of forty miles, where it receives a tributary from the north, called "Oquago," from thence south till it unites with the "Popacton" branch, which has its rise also in the Catskill and flows nearly parallel with the Mohock. Opposite the junction of these two rivers, forming the Delaware, enters the "Shahokin" branch from the west. The waters of the three streams, with several tributaries, make at this place a strong, beautiful river, the general direction of which for the next ninety miles by the course of the stream is southeast till reaching Port Jervis. The Great and Little Equinunk, both flowing from the west, are the next tributaries of importance. (On the latter stream, at "Cushutunk Falls," a settlement was made, in 1757, by people from Connecticut, to the evident concern of the "Pennamites" in the Minisink.)

The Lackawaxen (Lechawacsein) enters the Delaware from the west also, and with its two extensive branches, Middle Creek and the Wallenpaupack (Wallinkpapeck), adds largely to the volume of the main stream. (Near the mouth of the Lackawaxen was fought the unfortunate battle of the Minisink, in 1779.)

Five miles farther on enters another beautiful stream, with also another pretty Indian name, "Shohola," or, more correctly and prettier still, "Sholocta." (It is near the mouth of this river where the northern boundary line of the "Walking Purchase" terminated, embracing more than a thousand square miles of territory beyond what the poor Indians supposed they were selling, and including all of their beloved Minisink.)

The Navesink, or Mammakatonk, enters the Delaware from the east at Port Jervis; the Bushkill from the west at the town of that name, thirty miles south of Port Jervis. This stream is the dividing line between Monroe and Pike Counties. (Fort Hyndshaw was erected here in 1756, and, according to James Young "the commissioner general of ye Musters," who visited it in July, 1756, it stood "on the bank of a large creek and about a quarter of a mile from the river Delaware." It is thought now by some to have stood on the high grounds south of the road, near Maple Grove, and about three-fourths of a mile from the river. Commissioner Young describes the journey from Depui's at Shawnee as "over a good plain road, many plantations, but all deserted, and the houses chiefly burnt. Found at the Fort Lieut. James Hyndshaw with 25 men. The Capt. (Jno. Van Etten) with five men went up the river yesterday; they had been informed from the Jerseys that 6 Indians had been seen and fired at the night before, etc.)"

Brodhead Creek, a large tributary, and Cherry Creek empty into the Delaware near each other and two miles to the north of the "Gap."

There are scores of smaller streams along the entire course of this river, for the extent named. Upon many of these are found the numerous water-falls, for which the tributaries of the Upper Delaware are justly celebrated. The line of cliffs extending through Monroe and Pike Counties, running northeast and southwest, are for thirty miles up the Delaware especially noted for the number and beauty of its water-falls. This range of hills is composed of Hamilton sandstone, a dark shale rock, over which the streams have cut their way, forming picturesque glens and cascades. The carriage road from Bushkill to Milford passes along the river at the base. The exposed portions of the rocks are rendered frangible by the action of the elements, and break in their angular fragments, which are deposited in large quantities, and afford abundant material for building and keeping in repair a road that is remembered with pleasure by all who pass over it.

The timber of the Delaware region has been floated down the river to build up towns and cities; the land cleared and under cultivation where was once the abode of the wolf and panther, and where herds of deer roamed unmolested now dwell prosperous farmers. The areas of swamp are now green meadows, and on its once heavy-timbered bottoms and hill-sides the wheat and corn grow, and domestic animals feed. But the Delaware has become changed and fitful in its altered surroundings; its former flood tides, lasting for weeks, now disappear in as many days. The swamps and forests that once retarded the flow of water and furnished a reservoir, have now by cultivation become a vast watershed, whose surplus is hurried on to flood the swollen river.

There is a history in every stream aside from that of the human beings who inhabit its borders. A personal history, so to speak, dating from the time when its waters were first gathered and sent forth on their united journey to the ocean; flowing on unheard by human ear, before the red men knew it, or the wild animals came to hide in the forest where it ran, flowed on perhaps in the silent ages, when no living thing inhabited its waters, nor trees grew upon its banks.

The Delaware has been called by a variety of names. It was the favorite river of the well-known confederated nation of Indians, the "Lenni Lenape," and was honored by the bestowal upon it of the name of this ancient people "Lenapewihittuck," Lenape River, or the river of the Lenape.

The Swedes on the Lower Delaware, in the early part of the seventeenth century, heard the river called by the Indians, "Pautaxet." In a deed to William Penn, in 1682, it is named "Mackeriskickon," and in another paper, "Zunikoway;" it has also been called by Indians living on the Delaware "Kithanne" and "Gitchanne," signifying the main stream. The Indians near the head of the Delaware, it is said, called it "Lamasepose," signifying Fish River. The Hollanders named it "Zuydt" or South River, in contradistinction to North or Hudson; also Fish River. As is well known, it derives its present name from Lord De la Ware, who visited the bay in 1610.

The Delaware Water Gap.—The Delaware Water Gap is an opening in the Blue Mountains admitting the passage of the Delaware River on its journey to the ocean.

The mountain has been rent asunder, or separated at the time of the upheaval, which, if but a crevice at first, has, by the erosion of ages, widened the passage to allow the easy flow of the river, and to a depth below the general surface-level of the surrounding country. The mountain is composed of Oneida conglomerate and Medina sandstone, among the oldest and most enduring of rock structure; yet Professor Lewis and other geologists tell us that some thousands of feet of strata, including the coal-beds, once lay on top of this region, and have all been gradually eroded and washed into the sea by the wear of the elements.

It is interesting as well as important for every one to know something of the character of the rocks that define the topographical features of the country he inhabits; for it is to the enduring quality of one class of rocks that the mountains stand forth from age to age, to human observation unchanged, and to the yielding properties of others, that the lesser hills are clothed in verdure, and the valleys made to yield their abundant increase, while adding diversity and beauty to the landscape. The country between the Blue Ridge and the Pocono presents a varied and interesting class of rock exposure for geological investigation. Passing rapidly over the series northward, after leaving the Medina sandstone of the Blue Ridge, we find in Cherry Valley, and on the side approaching the mountain, the Clinton red shale; in the latter position it is striated and grooved by the glacial movement, the largest glacial groove in the State being formed on Table Rock, near the Delaware Water Gap. The next formation in the order of geological age is the Oriskany sandstone on Godfrey's Hill, overlying the Lower Helderberg limestone, of which, in part, this long, irregular and beautiful range of hills is composed, known besides the general name of "Godfrey's," as Crystal Hill, in Cherry Valley; Fox Hill, between Water Gap and Stroudsburg; Mount Lewis, just east of Brodhead's Creek; Shawnee Hill, east of Marshall's Creek; and Walpack Ridge, at its northeastern extremity, near Bushkill. Next following in order is the Cauda-galli grit, a dark gray slaty rock, finely exposed near Pipher's Mill, on Marshall's Creek. This is overlaid in many places by the corniferous (Upper Helderberg) limestone, in which are found nodules of chert or hornstone, the finer qualities of which were used by the Indians in making arrow-points and spear-heads. Following the Helderberg limestone appears the Marcellus black shale, an exposure of which is passed before reaching Marshall's Falls.

It is seen in various portions of the county, and is the deceptive material in which so much money has been spent in the vain search for coal. At Marshall's Falls we find the Hamilton sandstone, a dark shale rock, extending far up the Delaware. Next in geological order is the Genesee black slate, the Chemung gray sandstone and the Catskill red sandstone. In the last two are found the valuable flagstone quarries of this county. The last of this series is the Pocono gray sandstone, the rugged material of which that mountain is composed.

A number of theories have been advanced in reference to the formation of the Water Gap, perhaps the most satisfactory and comprehensive of which is the one by Professor Lewis, of Philadelphia, and which is published in this connection.

It is an interesting subject for geological inquiry. All theories admit at least the partial barrier to the passage of the stream at some period of its history. To the geological evidence in proof of this, and the submergence of the valley north of the mountain, and the subsequent subsidence of the waters, revealing the lesser hills and extensive plains, can only be added the dim traditions of a people, who, like the traditional lake, has forever passed away. It is not necessary, however, to solve the origin of the existence of the Water Gap to enjoy its beautiful surroundings. Views are obtained from many points of great extent—from the higher elevations, as far as the eye can reach, comprehending mountains and hills, villages, cultivated fields and primitive forests, the river in its sinuous journey, filling up the picture. The escarpment at the point of dislodgment is more bold on the New Jersey portion of the mountain, the mean of the angle of the entire elevation being about fifty degrees, while the cliffs, as seen from the gorge, exhibit sections of perpendicular descent. On the Pennsylvania mountain the general slope from the summit to the river is less precipitous, a mass of talus having been detached from the crest by the action of the elements, and, pouring lava-like down its sides, has covered the surface to the depth of many feet, concealing the ragged projections that characterize the face of the opposite mountain.

The whole scene is very impressive when viewed from a boat on the river. The serpentine course of the stream around the base of a spur of the main mountain retards the force of the current before it reaches the defile, and it has here the calm, placid beauty of a lake.

"Kittatinny" is the name by which the Blue Mountains or Blue Ridge was known by the Indians, and meant in their language "Endless Hills."

The Water Gap was known by them as

"Pohoqualin," meaning in their language "a river between two mountains." There was an Indian town of that name on the old Van Campen property, known later as the Ribble farm.

THE ORIGIN OF THE DELAWARE WATER GAP.[1]

"One of the first questions arising in the mind of an intelligent traveler looking upon that great gateway in the mountains known as the Delaware Water Gap is as to its origin. How did Nature produce this gap? Are there other gaps like this one? Was it made by some great 'convulsion of Nature' or is it the result of the slow wearing away of countless ages? Many answers have been given to these questions but it is only after patient observation of the methods of Nature's operation and a careful comparison of phenomena at many localities that an answer approaching the truth may be hazarded.

"The Delaware Water Gap is one of a series of similar gaps which cut through almost every mountain range in Pennsylvania. While probably none of them equal the Delaware Water Gap in beauty, most of them are formed after the same general plan and are due to the same causes; the harder the rock, the more picturesque are the walls of the gap, while a soft rock on either side of the gap permits the river to wind about among more gentle slopes.

"One of the first lessons that a student of geology must clearly impress upon his mind is that Nature has worked in past ages as she works now, slowly and uniformly; this doctrine of uniformitarianism is one of the best established maxims of modern geologists. Mountains were formed by the slow motion of the earth's crust, precisely as they are being formed now; just as we now know that the New Jersey coast is sinking, while the California and the Norwegian coasts are rising, so in ancient times slow upheaval and depression has made mountains or depressions. This movement of the crust is due to the gradual contraction of the earth as it cools from its former fluid condition; just as the skin of an apple forms into wrinkles as the apple shrinks, so the crust of the earth forms into ridges and mountains as its interior contracts.

"The Kittatinny Mountains, like the other mountains of the State, was pushed up by lateral pressure, due to this contraction; the strata were originally laid horizontally at the bottom of a great inland ocean which extended from here to the Rocky Mountains, and in which, as proved by their fossil remains, there swarmed myriads of living creatures, all long since extinct. The sands of that ocean were in the course of time hardened into sandstone, and long afterwards pushed up slowly and gradually into the form of a great wave, a portion of which is now called the Kittatinny Mountain. As this great wave was being formed, it chanced that here and there the massive strata gave way under the pressure and instead of bending into huge arches, cracked transversely, forming what geologists call faults. These cracks or faults were lines of weakness, and when the rains and winds and frosts began their work of removal, known as erosion, these cracks were naturally worn down more rapidly than the unbroken rock on either side, and a gap began to be formed. While these great forces of erosion, slowly but surely were eating down the great mountain wave, so that, only one side of it remains, at the same time the gap was just as slowly being deepened, streams began to run across it and finally the Delaware itself found its way through the natural chasm and its waters continued enlarging it to this day.

"The origin of the Delaware Water Gap was a small crack, made when the mountain was being upraised, which crack has been gradually enlarged by atmospheric agencies till it became a gap.

"There was no catastrophe, no convulsion, no flood bursting its way through. All was done slowly through the work of countless ages; ever since the period when the coal-beds were laid down, millions of years ago, the gap has been gradually deepened.

"The proofs of the foregoing statement are many. Careful observations in the gap itself will show the presence of the crack or fault referred to. On the Pennsylvania side the rocks are inclined to the horizon at a less angle than they are on the New Jersey side. At the same time the whole mountain on the New Jersey side is thrown 700 feet farther North than on the Pennsylvania side, and its crest rises 105 feet higher; there is evidently a fault, whereby the strata on the northeast side are thrown farther up and farther back than those on the southeast. The fault ran across the mountain in a southeast direction. That the fault not only cut through the Kittatinny Mountain, but also extended for some miles in a northwest direction, is clearly shown by the structure of the gap in Godfrey's Ridge at Experiment Mills; on the southwest side of Brodhead's Creek, at this place, the strata (Oriskany sandstone) are nearly horizontal, while just opposite the same strata are perpendicular, and the axis of the hill is at the same time displaced farther north. It is the same fault which runs through the Delaware Water Gap, but it is even more clearly marked.

"At a number of other gaps in the State there is evidence of a fault, although it is nowhere more clear than at the Water Gap; all theories that gaps are due to glacial action, ocean action, floods or earthquakes, though often urged, are without foundation in fact.

"It may be repeated that the primary cause is a crack, which crack has been widened and deepened by the same slow causes that have removed all the coal-beds from this region. Some 10,000 feet of strata, including the coal-beds, once lay on top of this region, and have all been gradually eroded and washed into the sea by the wear of the elements through the lapse of the ages; of this there is the strongest proof. The power of erosion is so enormous that until one has grasped it by his own observation in the field, it is beyond belief; a gap is a small matter for it to form, compared with the mountains it has removed, and the valleys it has transformed into mountains. The prophecy of the great Isaiah, that 'every valley shall be exalted and every mountain and hill shall be made low' was literally fulfilled long before the time of Adam."

INDIAN TRAILS.—One of the many subjects that afford interest in connection with the habitation of this region of country by the departed race is the study of their lines of travel-routes chosen by them to facilitate intercourse with each other and with distant tribes, and also to places affording means for the supply of their simple wants; indeed, for just such purposes as civilization requires in modern lines of travel, but, of course, to a very limited extent.

It is erroneous to suppose that the Indians roamed about and through the wild woods with undefined purpose or destination; the directions of these trails were well chosen for ease of travel, and they probably rarely departed from them except in pursuit of game. More of our highways than we imagine are laid upon lines surveyed to us, and well defined long before the country was invaded by us, and before the original possessors were despoiled and driven away.

It must become apparent to those who give attention to the subject, that the Indians lived almost exclusively in the valleys and on the borders of lakes and streams, because here were obtained that upon which they subsisted,—game, fish, berries, fruits and Indian corn. They could do very little, indeed, with their stone implements in felling trees and clearing forests, and the land cultivated for maize was such as the generous hand of nature furnished them, in the drift and alluvial deposits, made by successive, but irregular, periods of inundation. Along the course of the river, where there is a margin of level land of any extent, we find almost invariably evidence of the existence of camp-fires in the charred wood and heat-discolored stones and clay, disclosed by the crumbling earth along the river-bank, and in the plowed fields adjacent; in such localities are found almost exclusively the Indians' implements of warfare, and those for domestic utility—the stone age, in fact, in all its variety, including numberless fragmentary specimens of the fictile art; while to find even an arrow-point or spear-head on the mountain is noticeably a rare occurrence. The appearance of some of the newly-plowed fields along the Delaware, in Smithfield, often bring forcibly to mind the beautiful reflections of Thoreau: "I have no desire to go to California or Pike's Peak, but I often think at night, with inexpressible satisfaction and yearning, of the arrow-headiferous sands of Concord. I have often spent whole afternoons, especially in the spring, pacing back and forth over a sandy field looking for these relics of a by-gone race. This is the gold which our sands yield. The soil of that rocky spot of Simon Brown's land is quite ash-colored (now that the sod is turned up) from Indian fires, with numerous pieces of coal in it. There is a great deal of this ash-colored soil in the country: we do literally plow up the hearts of a people, and plant in their ashes."

The most extensive and well-known of Indian trails in this part of the country is that commencing at the Hudson River, passing in a westerly direction to and through the Minisink country, thence along the base of the Blue Mountain to Mahanoy Valley, and to the Susquehanna River at Sunbury. At the Hudson[1] the trail extended eastward to the New England States. Along this national highway, as in modern times we would speak of it, radiated trails north and south of the great artery, for its whole length; in this section those diverging southward passed through the several depressions in the mountain leading to Indian settlements, notably those through the Delaware Water Gap, Tatemy's Gap, Wind Gap and Lehigh Gap; those to the northward, up the numerous valleys and streams that intersect the main thoroughfare at varying angles. The well-known Indian trail to Wyoming Valley was one of these diverging lines of travel, and furnished the bearings for the road cut for the passage of General Sullivan's army on its march to the rescue of the Wyoming sufferers, in 1779.

[1] "A CURIOSITY AND ANCIENT LANDMARK.—In a field on the Gardiner Smith farm, near the road between Ellenville and Kingston, says the Utica (N. Y.) Herald, is a chestnut tree, which is both a natural curiosity and an ancient landmark. The trunk is eight feet in diameter. Four feet from the ground a white elm tree a foot in diameter projects from the trunk. It is supposed that there was once a cavity or depression in the side of the chestnut tree, which became filled with decayed vegetable matter, into which a seed from an elm had lodged and from which sprung the present elm. The latter has spreading branches, which mingle their foliage with that of the chestnut every year. Both trees are sound. The chestnut was an important landmark in the ancient Indian trail leading from Esopus to the Delaware Water Gap, down the Neversink and Delaware Valleys. It is mentioned in many old legal documents of Ulster County. The tree is about 600 years old."

Surely the poor Indians have been better to us than we to them, for they have shown us "the way we should go," and it is literally true that we follow in their footsteps.

"The lines along which, with roar and rumble, the engine now rushes with its mighty load, making an old-time day's journey in sixty minutes, are almost exactly coincident with the first rude wagon-roads of the pioneers of a century and more ago, and also with the paths or trails along the water-courses and through the easiest mountain passes trodden from time immemorial by the moccasined foot of the red man. The skilled surveyor and engineer has followed with scientific instruments where the Indian first went, guided only by the instincts of woodcraft. The difference between the new and the old is far less in the lines of communication than in the method of travel, and the moderns, with all of their wisdom and knowledge, have done little besides making grand improvements on old routes—building with stone and iron and steel, it is true, but, nevertheless, along the course of the old, narrow, leaf-strewn path that the Indian first found out was the most direct and practicable line of communication between two given points."

Pioneer Roads.—The desire to facilitate intercourse with each other, evinced by the early settlers of a neighborhood, in the immediate construction of foot-paths, bridle-paths and roadways from dwelling to dwelling, as each new settler appeared, probably gave rise to the old Roman maxim that "the first step in civilization is to make roads." In most cases the first roads were constructed upon foot-paths by the new dwellers, and so continued, as other families appeared, for the convenience of friendly intercourse and mutual protection, without thought that these foot-paths were destined in time to become the established highways of the country. Hence the adverse criticism on country roads in general is more frequent than just. It is very easy now to discover where hills might have been avoided and distances shortened and to reproach these pioneers for the lack of engineering skill displayed in road-making.

Roads laid out by order of court in these early times were frequently located upon Indian trails, and not unfrequently upon the trails of wild animals. Senator Benton advised Colonel Fremont, in his first expedition, to notice the trail of animals across the country westward, observing that "the buffalo is the best of engineers."

The correctness of this observation is confirmed in the experience of old hunters, who ascertain that deer and other wild animals, when unpursued, follow the best chosen route of travel from their hiding-places in the swamps to the plains and across the mountains; and that class of hunters who avail themselves of this knowledge dispense with the use of the dog and the excitement of the chase for the more successful, though solitary, "still hunt," lying in wait upon the trail until such time as the well-known habits of the animal lead him to quit his hiding-place in quest of food and water, when he falls an easy prey to the deliberate aim of the hunter.

Roads through the several "Gaps" or depressions in the Blue Ridge, between the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers, were laid out on Indian trails. These trails were severally used as found most convenient, from time immemorial, by the different tribes of Indians living between the Delaware and Susquehanna, in their intercourse with other tribes and nations south of the mountain, and subsequently in their attendance upon the numerous conferences held at Easton and Philadelphia; as also in conveying their furs and pelts to a place of barter. But it was in the way of these people to Bethlehem, to seek a city of safety during the troublesome times that followed the advent of the white man, that these mountain paths became most frequented after the settlement of the Moravians, in 1742.

For many years after settlements were made in the Minisink there was little or no intercourse with the inhabitants south of the Blue Ridge, and no wagon roads in that direction or any other, except "the Old Mine road," extending from the copper-mines at Pahaquarry to Esopus on the Hudson, a distance of one hundred miles. This was the first road north of the mountain and is claimed to be the first of that extent in the province of Pennsylvania.

The Old Mine road greatly facilitated immigration to the Minisink, and brought to this section a well-to-do class of men. In the succeeding fifty years there was little immigration from any other direction.

The country south of the Blue Ridge was inaccessible except by Indian paths through the several "gaps" in the mountains.

The Mine road was also one of the main avenues of communication between New England and Wyoming. Over it passed the enterprising people of Connecticut on their way to settle in this valley, which was claimed by their State, to the great disturbance of the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink, and which was the occasion of frequent communications with the authorities at Philadelphia. Over this road also passed the suffering fugitives after the massacre at Wyoming in 1778, after fifty miles of weary wandering through a desolate wilderness between the Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers.

The old Mine road is the principal highway for modern travel for the country through which it passes.

In 1734 a petition, signed by Jacob Swartwood, William Proovost, William Cole and others, inhabitants of Minisink, Orange County, was presented to the Assembly of New York, asking for assistance in repairing about forty miles of the Mine road, to the house of Elbert Dewitt, in the town of Rochester, as they (the citizens) had no other way of transporting their produce than through the Minisink road.

There is scarcely a doubt that the original purpose, in the construction of this road, was the transportation of minerals from mines in the Lower Minisink to the Hudson River. The apparent inconsistency of its construction for that purpose, as it now seems to us, is the result of its having evidently been built before the value and extent of the mineral deposits were ascertained. There is still enough, however, in the appearance of the copper-mines at Pahaquarry, in the Lower Minisink, to allure the sanguine and unscientific adventurer.

As to the time the road was built, we know, to a certainty, very little. That it was in existence when Nicholas Depui settled in the Lower Minisink, in 1725, is unquestioned. It is fair to conclude, therefore, that the road was built and the mining commenced before the English obtained possession of New York, in 1664, and, if so, it was the oldest road of the same extent in the county. Whether constructed by government or by individual enterprise, it was a work of great magnitude at that early day. The country through which it passed being, of course, an entire wilderness, the difficulties to be overcome we can well imagine to be such as would be considered formidable at this day, with the benefit of modern skill and modern appliances. To remove the gigantic trees of the primitive forest was impossible in the narrow compass of a wagon-road, and the only method was the slow process of burning, after they had been felled to the ground by the axemen.

They could have had little knowledge either of the geography or topography of the section through which they were passing, and must have encountered difficulties in determining even the general direction, without scarcely attempting to make choice of favorable grade or suitable location, and yet we are told that the road is very judiciously laid out; and this all seems to be explained when we learn that it was laid on the old Indian trail leading from the Hudson to the Delaware Water Gap.

In giving an account of the early roads of the neighborhood, interest attaches to the persons originating their construction, and who, at the time, resided in the locality. Such personal history is very meagre, but, as far as can be obtained, is given in these papers.

The first public road constructed, of which we have any record, after the Mine road, was from Nicholas Depui's, in the Minisink, to William Cole's, in 1737. The extent and direction of this road is not now known. In the year 1744 a road was laid out by the court at Doylestown, Bucks County, from Walpack Bend, on the Delaware, to Isaac Ysselstein's, on the Lehigh, via Solomon Jennings', and thence to the old Bethlehem road, which was twenty-seven miles and one hundred and eighteen perches.

The distance here named is the same as that from Walpack Bend to the Wind Gap, and that was doubtless the portion embraced in the grant.

In another petition to the court for the same road, the route is described as "starting from a considerable bend in the River Delaware to John McMichael's plantation (Mount Paul), and continued two years afterward to Nazareth, from which place there is a road to Philadelphia." This road followed the course of the river from the "Bend," one mile south of Bushkill, where there was formerly a ford and now a ferry, to Shawnee; thence by Stroudsburg, passing over Mount Paul to what is now Kunkletown; and from thence over the hills coming into Cherry Valley, at Shaw's Meadows, now the home of Abram Featherman.

The petition of Aaron Depui, Thomas McCracken, Robert McCracken, William McFeren and Daniel Craig, for a road from Depui's mill (Shawnee), by way of Tatemy's Gap to Easton, was granted in 1753, to be a bridle-road from Samuel Depui's to the east end of Brushy Meadows, and from thence a wagon-road to Easton. This was the year after the organization of Northampton County. The length of this road was twenty-three and a half miles and fifty-one perches.

As stated, it started at Depui's mill, at Shawnee; thence by the residence of Aaron Depui, who lived at that time at what is now known as the "River Farm" (Mr. Croasdale's); thence by the property now owned by Mr. Newhart; thence by Mr. Labar's farm, formerly owned by another Aaron Depui, son of the Aaron mentioned in this petition; thence direct to Labar's mill, in Cherry Valley, where it connected with what is the present Tatemy's Gap road over the mountain.

PIONEER ROADS—LOCAL REMINISCENCES —EARLY SETTLERS. — Solomon Jennings mentioned above, with Edward Marshall and James Yates, were the persons employed by the Governor in the "Walking-Purchase" of 1737. Jennings owned a tract of land, which is now a part of the Colonel Norton place, a short distance west of Stroudsburg.

Aaron Depui and Samuel Depui were sons of Nicholas, the first settler at Shawnee. Samuel Depui resided at this time at the old Depui homestead, near the river. The present large stone mansion was built in 1785.

Aaron Depui was the father of Aaron, who was born in 1760, and died in 1845. The last-named was, for many years, a justice of the peace, and resided all his life in Smithfield. He lived on the property then called the "Depui Farm," now owned by Amos La Bar, one mile from the Delaware Water Gap, on the road to Stroudsburg. Mr. Depui is remembered as a very good mathematician, and was also fond of astronomical studies.

The old log school-house that stood at the edge of the woods, which in our youthful imagination was full of bears and other ferocious animals, was near the home of Squire Depui.

Many of the youth living in the lower portions of Smithfield, forty years ago, and those of two or three generations preceding, received here their elementary education, or perhaps the entire amount of education they possessed. Those of the number living will remember with what reverential awe the venerable form of Mr. Depui was looked upon, as the man that could make almanacs, foretell the coming of the dreaded eclipse, and could besides solve all the abstruse problems in Pike's Arithmetic! Yet those of the boys who had the courage to approach him found him not only quite human, but kind and considerate, often permitting us to pick the fallen apples and gather the wild plums in the thorny hedges, and such apples and such plums, only a boy can do full justice to the memory of. Apples do not taste so now, and the plums, too, that were so deliciously sweet then, are quite sour now, and beguile us no longer to their covert, amid the hawthorn and the wild brambles.

There is nothing of the old school-house now remaining but the immaterial, to which the memory clings with fond tenacity. It would not be called a big school-house now, and we suppose there was not a great amount of architectural skill displayed in its construction, but it presented, a square, honest, friendly front, and, contrary to the present method, a rear equally comely in aspect; the logs comprising the structure were carefully hewn, the ends well dovetailed and the interstices filled with mud, made from clay as good as "Cæsar's body might yield," so that there was scarcely a chink to be found between the logs, large enough for a boy to run his hand through. In all its fair proportions we can now, in memory, behold it,—its solid oaken floor, a shelf in the southwest corner for the water bucket, another above it for hats and shawls, and still another for the dinner pails, and above all these a place for the master's score of reserve switches, and we cannot forget the well-battened window shutter that was ours to close after school, nor the long stout pole to lean against it to make sure the fastening. And then dear Johnny Groot, too, quite our first recollection, and most pleasant, of our schoolmasters are centred in him. How we wish we could tell him now how sincerely we forgive him for trying to make us learn our lessons, and to listen to his favorite method of teaching the rule of three by "inverse proportions!" How we thought him then to be hasty and exacting, and how we know him now, to have been more patient and lenient and kind than we deserved, and altogether so much better to us than we to him, that we would now love to humble ourselves before him.[1]

Abram Depui, now living near the Water Gap, is a son of Aaron, last named. He is now in the ninety-fifth year of his age, having been born 14th of September, 1791. For over twenty years he has been entirely blind, and bears the affliction patiently and uncomplainingly, and with a resignation and submission that is beautiful to witness. He retains his mental faculties to a remarkable degree, and his recollection of events occurring years ago is clear and accurate. Mr. Depui is the last surviving soldier of the War of 1812, north of the mountain.

Aaron Depui, first-named, son of Nicholas, purchased the "River Farm," then known as the "John Smith farm," of his father in 1745. He kept a store at Shawnee in the years 1743 to 1747. The writer is in possession of a portion of his ledger, commencing with 1743. His customers were scattered throughout the Minisink, from Dingman's, at Dingman's Ferry, to McDowell's, in Cherry Valley. The names of Brink and Wheeler on the ledger would indicate that some of his patrons lived at still greater distance up the Delaware. Some of the purchases were quite large for the times. The New Jersey portion of the Minisink is also represented in this ledger. Following is a list of the principal purchasers at Aaron Depui's store in 1743–44:

Anthon Derick Westbrook, Thomas, Nicholas, Hendrick, Redolphus and Garret Schoonhoven (now Schoonover), Daniel and Benjamin Schoonmaker (Shoemaker), Nicholas Depui, James Hyndshaw, Moses Depui, Abel Westfall, Jonathan Potts, Daniel Brodhead, Nicholas Westfall, Jacobus Quick, Sandec Rosagrance, Herman Rosagrance, John McDowell, Samuel Depui, Thomas Quick, Christopher Denmark, Johannes Bush, Manuel Gunsals, Jr., Henry Bush, John Cortright, Johannes Cortright, Jacob Seabring, Barney Stroud, Garret Decker, Luard Kuykendall, Jacoby Kuykendall, Henry Mulhollen, Rudolph Brinke, Thomas Brink, Isaac Van Campen, Abraham Van Campen, Adam Dingman, John McMikle, Barnabas Swarthout, John Casper Freymouth,[2] Joseph

[1] John H. Groot, a school-teacher in Smithfield for many years, some time a private tutor at the writer's father's. He was an excellent scholar and was especially noted for his beautiful penmanship. Mr. Groot married a daughter of Aaron Depui.

The first school-teacher of whom we have any account in Smithfield was James Middlecut, who lived here in 1780 and later, and had a small log house at "Middlecut Spring," a half-mile west of the Water Gap House.

William Dawson taught vocal music to Elizabeth De Pui, daughter of Samuel De Pui, in 1750. She married Daniel Brodhead in 1758.

[2] John Casparus Fryenmuth was pastor of the four Reformed Dutch Churches in the Minisink from June 1, 1741, until August 12, 1756, at which time he was obliged to discontinue his labors on account of the Indian depredations along the Delaware. "Smithfield" was one of the four churches organized in 1741. The church was a log building situated on the eastern border of a farm now owned by Michael Walter.

In the old church record appears the marriage of M.

Wheeler, Abraham Van Campen, Sr., Hugh Pugh, John Van Campen, Jacobus Depui, Daniel Depui, Joseph Seely, Edward Cherry, Robert Hanna, William Potts, etc.

Nicholas Depui, Samuel Depui and Daniel Brodhead seem to have been the largest purchasers. Nicholas Depui is charged for one hat and cap for "Joseph," the Indian, 10*s.*; one quart of rum for Indian "James," 2*s*; amount answered for "Joseph Pammer," the Indian, £1 15*s.* 9*d.*; Cr. By meals to the Indians 7*s.* 6*d.*; do. 4*s.* Samuel Depui is charged for Indian Poxinose's wife 10*s.* (there is an island in the Delaware, above Depui's called "Poxino"). To cash paid "Cobus," the Indian; To articles for the Indians, 4*s.* 6*d.*; To articles for "Howpeek," the Indian, £1 3*s.* 6*d.*; one quart of rum for "Howpeek," Indian, for a canoe, 15*s.*; to six pounds shot for "Anthony the Great," Indian, 4*s.* 6*d.*; 1 qt. rum for "Anthony the Great," 9*d.*; cash for Edward Cherry,[1] 5*s.* 3*d.*; one yard and a half thicks for Indian boy; Cash answered for Indian "Arry," 1*s.* 4*d.*; To rent for ye plantation named Smithfield (1746), £45; rent for ye plantation named Smithfield (1747), £30; To a Negro Boy, £33; To 36 barrels flour 6lb. 3qt. 23lbs., amounting to £30 7*s.* 8*d.*

Abel Westfall is charged with two hunting saddles and bridles £4 4*s.* 6*d.* James Hyndshall, one hogshead rum, one hundred and seven gallons, £12 9*s.* 8*d.*, and to cash paid the Indian "Joo;" Benjamin Schoonmaker, one cap for the Indian "James," etc.

In September, 1762, there was an application to the court for a road in Lower Smithfield from Shoemaker's mill to Brodhead Creek. This was from the old Zimmerman place, then owned and occupied by Benjamin Shoemaker, to Dansbury (East Stroudsburg), and at the same time for a road from Brodhead Creek to Mount Paul (John McMichael's), there to connect with the Wind Gap and Nazareth road.

To this petition are appended the names of John McDowell, Philip Bossard, Lawrence Romig, John Hillman, Abram Miller and William Smith, who are appointed viewers.

John McDowell lived at Shaw's Meadows, Cherry Valley. He was born in Ireland, May 20, 1714, died September 25, 1779. He married Hannah, daughter of Nicholas Depui; and Mr. McDowell's daughter, Hannah, married John Shaw. At the time of this wedding, McDowell was entertaining some Connecticut fugitives at his barn, not deeming it prudent to let their presence be known to the guests of his house.

Philip Bossard, another of the petitioners, was also a resident of Cherry Valley and one of its earliest settlers. He resided near the present town of Bossardsville. His house afforded a refuge for the residents of the neighborhood in the Indian raids of 1757. A squad of men was afterwards sent for their protection.

There was a road constructed about 1750 from Fort Hyndshaw (Bushkill) to Andrew Dingman's (Dingman's Choice), and from thence to Milford.

In 1793 a road was laid out from Abel Partridge's,[2] in Hamilton township, at the intersection of the "Sullivan Road" to Mount Paul or John Huston's, "at which place it intersected with the road leading to the gristmill of Colonel Jacob Stroud, and thence to the landings of Daniel Shoemaker on the Delaware (now Zimmerman's Landing) and to Nicholas Depui's."

Fryenmuth, as follows: "1742, Joh. Casparus Fryenmuth, young man, born in Switzerland, to Lena Von Etten, young woman, born at Nytsfield; married with a license from Governeur Morris, in Jersey, by Justice Abram Van Campen, the 23d of July, 1742."

The first marriage appearing on record in the Minisink in New Jersey is under date of March 5, 1738: "Johannes Westbroeck, Jr., young man, born at Nytsfield, to Magdalena Westbroeck, young woman, born at Horly, and both dwelling at Manissinck. Married by Anthony Westbroeck, Justice of the Peace.

[1] Cherry Creek is a stream emptying into the Delaware near the Delaware Water Gap. The earliest account we have of the name of this stream is in a warrant from Thomas Penn to Samuel Depui, for one hundred acres of land, dated August 28, 1738, wherein it is named "Solomon's Creek." In 1768 and for several years after, it was called "Ned Cherry's Creek" and sometimes "Cherry's Creek."

[2] Abel Partridge is said to have been engaged in "Shay's Insurrection" in Massachusetts, 1785–86, and was a fugitive. He lived near Snydersville, in Hamilton township.

Henry Hauser, Philip Shrawder, Daniel Shoemaker, David Dills, Ulrick Hauser and John Brown were appointed commissioners.

Benjamin Schoonmaker and Daniel Schoonmaker, brothers, were among the early Holland settlers in the Minisink. They were living in Smithfield before 1741. The name was changed to Shoemaker before the close of the last century. Benjamin married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas De Pui; Daniel married Anna Prys (Price). Both were married before 1742. Another family of the same name resided here about the same time, viz., Garret, who married Catharine De Pui; Catharine, who married Abram De Voor; and Helena, or Lena, who married Joseph Haynes. These also were married before 1742.

In 1744 Benjamin Shoemaker purchased eighty-nine acres of land of Nicholas De Pui, situated at the junction of Brodhead's Creek and the Delaware, being a part of De Pui's purchase of William Allen. His dwelling was on the upper portion of the tract, near Marshall Creek, where Annis Zimmerman now resides. Benjamin and Daniel were sons of Jochin Schoonmaker, whose will, dated at Kingston, N. Y., was proven Nov. 7, 1730, showing that he had fourteen children. His wife's name was Antye Hulsey. One of the daughters, Tryntie, married Jacobus Bruyn, from New York State, who once owned the "John Smith" farm, in Smithfield; Ettie married Joseph Hassbrook; Jacomita married Johannes Miller; Gretchen married Moses Dupuis, Jr. (De Pui); Elizabeth married Benjamin Dupuis; Antye married Cornelius Wyncoop; Sarah married Jacobus Dupuis.

Benjamin Shoemaker bought other land adjoining his first purchase, and after his death, in 1775, the property was inherited by his son Daniel, who sold the whole to John George Zimmerman, in 1802. The children of Benjamin Shoemaker and Elizabeth De Pui were as follows: Susanna, Madalena, Elia, Helena, Daniel, Hannah, Nancy and Elijah. Susanna was baptized 22d of May, 1741; Garret Decker and Susanna Du Puy were her sponsors. Elia was baptized 22d of March, 1747; Moses De Puy and Anna Prys (Price) were his sponsors. Daniel was baptized January 5, 1752; his sponsors were Daniel Shoemaker and Ann Prys. Elijah was baptized August 31, 1760. Elijah married Jane McDowell, a daughter of John McDowell, who owned and lived on the property known as "Shaw's Meadows," in Cherry Valley, the property now owned by Jacob H. Featherman. Mr. McDowell is buried in the church-yard, near the old home. Elijah moved to Wyoming, and was killed in the massacre there by a Tory named Windecker. His remains lie in the cemetery at "Forty Fort." He was but twenty-six years of age at the time of his death. He left a widow and one son, named also Elijah, who was the father of the Hon. D. L. Shoemaker, late member of Congress from Wilkes-Barre.

Daniel Shoemaker, son of Benjamin and brother of Elijah, married Ann, a daughter also of John McDowell. They had a son baptized January 27, 1792, named Nicholas, and another son baptized May 17, 1795, named Daniel McDowell. After selling the property to Zimmerman, in 1802, he moved to Owego township, Tioga County, New York. One of his daughters, Elizabeth, married George Nyce, in 1801. They were married by Moses Chambers, Esq., in Smithfield. Another daughter, Hannah, married Samuel Brodhead, and moved to New York State. Nicholas De Pui, son of Samuel De Pui and Ann Shoemaker, his wife, are named as the executors of Daniel Shoemaker's will.

Benjamin Shoemaker, the first-named in this sketch, was chosen deacon of Smithfield Church May 16, 1747, and was elected elder (Ouderling) April 27, 1751.

The families of Shoemakers now in the Minisink seem to have descended from Garret, who married Catharine De Pui before 1741, and Jochem, who married Rachel Van Gorden in 1750. Henry, a son of one of the above, was married to Blandina Van Campen in 1783.

Henry Hauser, at the period named in this commission, resided at what is now called Stormsville, in Cherry Valley, and his brother Ulrick at what was for many years known as the "Hauser Farm," now the "River Farm," the home of Mr. E. T. Croasdale. Henry and Ulrick were sons of Henry Hauser. They came from Friedenshal, near Stockertown, and settled in Smithfield in 1790. There was a Henry Hauser who joined a scouting party who, it is said, went in pursuit of Indian scalps, in consideration of a bounty of one hundred and fifty dollars for every male over ten years of age. This dreadful measure having received the sanction of the Governor, was resorted to in 1764; and the bounty was afterwards increased to one thousand dollars. The scouting-party named numbered thirty, and started from the "Hunter Settlement," in Mount Bethel, Northampton County. Henry was killed near the Lehigh. He was probably the father of Ulrick and Henry. It is possible that enterprises of this nature may then have been looked upon with more favor, and even perhaps were considered laudable as well as profitable.

The "Hauser Farm," in Smithfield, was one of the landmarks of early times. Ulrick Hauser kept a tavern there for many years. He was succeeded by his son John. The elections were held at his house, also the militia trainings, country balls, etc.

The chain of title connected with this property is unusually full and accurate, and possesses historical interest, commencing with the recital of a portion of the will of William Penn, as follows:

"Pennsylvania, ss:

"Richard Hill, Isaac Norris, Samuel Preston and James Logan, surviving trustees appointed by the last Will and Testament of the late Proprietary of this Province for all his lands in America:

"To Jacob Taylor, surveyor-general of the said Province: Whereas the late William Penn, Esq., Chief Proprietary and Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania and territories thereunto belonging, did by his last Will and Testament, made in the year of our Lord 1712, give and devise unto us and our heirs, amongst other persons, since deceased, all his lands, tenements and hereditaments whatsoever, Rents and other Profits in this Province & Territories, or elsewhere in America, upon trust, that we should sell and dispose of so much of his lands as should be sufficient to pay off his just debts, and that we should sett off to his Grand Children and Daughter therein named several tracts of land therein mentioned, and amongst the rest, to his Grand Son, William Penn, Ten Thousand Acres of land in this Province, in some proper and beneficial place thereof: Which will having for some years after the said Proprietor's decease been disputed by the Heir at Law in the King's Court of Exchequer at Westminster, was at length, by a decree of said Court, in July last, fully ratified and confirmed.

Now these are in pursuance of the said will and by virtue of the Powers to us thereby granted to authorise and require thee to survey or cause to be surveyed to the s[d] William Penn, grandson of the said Proprietor, the said quantity of ten thousand acres of land, in some proper and advantageous place or places of this province, as directed by said Will, and we do hereby particularly direct and enjoin thee to lay out at least five thousand acres thereof on the Lowland on Delaware and the adjacent uplands, situated in the county of Bucks above Pechaqualin Hills, & lying between them and that part of the said river called Minnesinks, or near to the same, in one or more tracts, and make a return of the said surveys unto us, for w[ch] this shall be thy sufficient authority. Given under our hands & seals, at Philadelphia, the sixteenth day of November, A.D. 1727.

"Richard Hill, (Seal.)
"Isaac Norris, (Seal.)
"Saml. Preston, (Seal.)
"James Logan, (Seal.)"

The aforesaid ten thousand acres granted by William Penn to the grandson were conveyed to William Allen by indenture, bearing date the 20th of August, A.D. 1728, who, by deed dated the 10th of December, 1733, conveyed unto Nicholas Depui the following three islands or tracts of land, all situate, lying and being in the county of Bucks aforesaid: First the island in the Delaware commonly called "Manwalamink," containing one hundred and twenty-six acres; second, the island commonly called the "Great Shawna," situate in the river Delaware, over against the Shawna town, containing one hundred and forty-six acres; the third tract or island, situate between creeks or small branches of the Delaware, the adjacent land to the southward of which being lately held by John Smith, and that to the northward is the said Shawna town, containing thirty-one acres. Also three other tracts,—one of eighty-nine acres, one of one hundred and twelve acres and one of twenty and one-half acres. The first-named of these tracts (eighty-nine acres) was sold by Nicholas Depui to Benjamin, Shoemaker in 1744, and is now known as the "Zimmerman farm." The second (one hundred and twelve acres) was sold by Nicholas Depui to his son Aaron, merchant, March 26

1745. It was then and before known as the "John Smith farm," later as the "Hauser farm," and now as the "River farm." Aaron Depui sold the aforesaid one hundred and twelve acres to Moses Depui, of Rochester, August 11, 1748. Moses Depui sold to Jacobus Bruyn June 16, 1767. Jacobus Bruyn, by will dated 1781, devised the property to his two daughters, Mary and Gertrude, the former of whom married Nicholas Hardenberg, and the latter Cornelius Dubois.

Hardenberg and Dubois sold the property to Ulrick Hauser April 8, 1791. Ulrick Hauser sold to John Hauser March 5, 1810. Evan Thomas, administrator of John Hauser, sold to John Carey and Jacob Able, of Easton, June 30, 1829. Carey and Able sold to Jacob Able December 12, 1830. Jacob Able sold to John T. Bell March 31, 1837. John T. Bell sold to John Jordan, Jr., et al., May 31, 1838. John Jordan, Jr., et al., to Seldon T. Scranton, for the Lackawanna Iron and Coal Company, in 1856. Seldon T. Scranton to Evan T. Croasdale in 1856—reserving the portion containing the limestone quarries. The last was sold to Evan T. Croasdale in 1879.

The first two purchases by Nicholas Depui of William Allen amounted to five hundred and sixty-six acres, including the six per cent. allowance. It is probable that John Smith may have been the first resident land-holder north of the Blue Mountain in this State. William Allen, in his conveyance to Nicholas Depui alludes to John Smith's possessions as "the adjacent land to the southward, being lately held by John Smith." There is some uncertainty as to how John Smith's title was obtained, or under whom he was holding possession. He may have purchased from the Indians, as did Mr. Depui, or possibly of William Allen; if of the latter, Allen must have repurchased of Smith before selling to De Pui; yet there is no mention of such purchase in the deed of Allen to De Pui; but the one hundred and twelve acre tract (the John Smith tract) is therein described, bearing distances and contents given precisely as in the original draft, and all the subsequent transfers down to the purchase by Ulrick Hauser in 1791. In later transfers the surveys embraced adjoining purchases made by Hauser and with which the John Smith tract was from that date merged.[1]

The origin of the name of this historic township can, with a degree of certainty, be traced to the original owner of the "River Farm." The transition from "John Smith's fields" (as the property was called in some of the old title papers, then "Smith's fields," as given in others) to Smithfield is easy and natural. Aaron Depui, in a transfer made as late as 1747, speaks of the property as "adjoining the land I now possess called Smithfield," and in a ledger of his, commencing with the year 1743, his brother Samuel is charged with the rent of ye plantation named Smithfield, for the year 1746, forty-five pounds.

The John Smith here mentioned could not have been the same person who dealt so largely in lands in Smithfield between 1778 and 1790, and whose name was sometimes written Smyth. It is so written by himself in a deed made to Hardenberg and Dubois in 1788.

Most of the transfers of property made about this period—deeds and other papers—were executed before Col. William Wills, then justice of the peace, who came to New York from England a few years before the outbreak of the American Revolution. He is said to have been closely related to Dean Swift. His wife was a daughter of Col. Henry Kinney, of Dublin. He removed from Tyron County to New York, in 1776, and to Smithfield in 1780. While in New York State he was member of Congress, colonel of the militia, chairman of the county, judge of the Court of Common Pleas and commissioner for detecting and defeating conspiracies against the State. He possessed large wealth, and had such faith in the ultimate success of our cause, and in the integrity, as well as in the ability, of the government, when the struggle should be ended, to discharge its obligations, that he exchanged freely of his gold for our "Continental currency," to relieve the necessities of others, until he found himself at the end, with little gold, but with a vast amount of badly printed cards, upon which he failed to realize.

[1] Melchoir Sprague, long a surveyor of this county, says that John Smith held a title from Allen for the "River Farm" (Smithfield) before 1730, including a large tract on both sides of Cherry Creek.

While living in Smithfield Col. Wills resided for a time on the Milford road at Marshall Creek, during which time he acted as justice of the peace, and as he rarely charged for performing the marriage ceremony, he was of course very liberally patronized.

It is related by the writer's venerated mother, who was a granddaughter of Col. Wills, that on one occasion he performed the marriage ceremony when he and the expectant bride and groom were on opposite sides of the flooded stream that had carried the bridge away and rendered impossible their nearer approach.

Philip Shrawder was captain of a company of Rangers from Northampton County during the Revolution. He writes to President Reed from Lower Smithfield, September 6, 1781, and among other things, says: "The success I met with in recruiting since Colonel Levers wrote to your Excellency on my account is owing to the kindness of Esquire (John) Van Campen in advancing me some hard money for that purpose." John Dickson, president of council, writes to Captain Shrawder from Philadelphia, under date of March 4, 1783: "As the Continental troops have lately been withdrawn from Wyoming, it is by the General Assembly thought necessary for the protection of the settlement against the savages to replace the guard immediately with the two companies of Rangers commanded by you. . . . It is our earnest desire that the inhabitants settled at or near Wyoming should be in all respects treated with kindness. This we know to be the desire also of the Legislature," etc.[1]

Captain Shrawder and his company were quartered for a time at James Logan's, "Logan's Inn," a short distance west of Stroudsburg, in July, 1784, on his way to suppress disturbances in Wyoming, under command of Colonel Armstrong. Captain Shrawder resided at Shawnee, in Smithfield, and he and John Coolbaugh kept store there in 1797. Captain Shrawder was one of the executors of Nicholas Depui's will, dated April 23, 1808.

John Van Campen was one of the most prominent men of the Minisink. He espoused the cause of the Pennamites in the effort to prevent the people of Connecticut from forming settlements within the province of Pennsylvania, and was appointed an additional magistrate for that purpose in 1770. On the 3d of July, 1771, "he is advised to raise a number of men as soon as possible and strive to interrupt (intercept) them (the Yankees) at the river." He writes on the 4th to James Tilghman, secretary of the Land-Office in Philadelphia, "I have sent to the upper end of the Minisink. I am afraid that matters will not go well at Wyoming, as I have reason to think those people have friends on the ground. It may be depended upon that there are great matters in hand with the Yankees, as there are almost every day dispatches from Isaiah Van Campen (who espouses the cause of the Yankees) down to Mr. Shoemaker's, as, I suppose, for him to transmit back to the party how matters stand among us." On the 5th of July, 1771, he writes that "he fears the Block-house will be abandoned at Wyoming, and in that case would advise that all the cattle be driven down the river, and if they could do no better, drive them to Fort Allen," etc. August 9th collects provisions and proceeds with a party of nineteen men to Wyoming to relieve the block-house: "Moved on to the Forks of the Lahawanak and Wyoming paths. Arrived near the Fort; dispatched an Indian to inform the people at the Block-house of our approach, and learned it had surrendered to the Yankees. Sent a party of six men to lay on the Sheholey road from Wyoming to the Delaware (an old Indian trail) to prevent express going that way to New England," etc.

September 27, 1778, he wrote a joint letter with John Chambers (sub-lieutenant), Nicholas De Pui, Benjamin Van Campen (sub-lieutenant) and Jacob Stroud (colonel) to the Hon. George Ryan, president of the Board of War, Philadelphia, of "the defenseless condition of Smithfield, and that Delaware and Upper Smithfield, a fine country of near thirty miles in length, is almost evacuated, the people moved over to Jersey for safety, and in this township (Smithfield) there is only a guard left at Colonel Stroud's."

In 1780 John Van Campen was elected member of Council, and thereafter, during its sessions, his time was spent in Philadelphia. "March 4, 1781, the Hon. John Van Campen presented to Council his account of attendance in Council, which is as follows, vizt.:

"The State of Pennsylvania to John Van Campen, To attendance in Council 30 days at £50, £1500, Continental money,—equal to	20	0	0
From Jan'y 13 to March 15th, 1781,—62 days, at 25*s*	77	0	0
Milage on 90 miles, coming to Philadelphia and returning home,—180 miles, at 1*s*	9	0	0
And thereupon an order was drawn in favor of John Van Campen, Esquire, for the sum of £106	0	0

State money, agreeable to said account."

"In Council May 2nd, 1781. Order drawn in favor of Peter Medick for the sum of 1000 pounds of the money emitted by Act of Assembly passed 7th April last, to be forwarded to Honorable John Van Campen for the purpose of defending the frontiers, of which sum the said John Van Campen is to account."

Captain Philip Shrawder writes to John Van Campen from Chestnut Hill, June 19, 1782, while the latter was member of Council at Philadelphia, transmitting the pay-roll of his company; desiring payment and clothing for his men, says he has been compelled to contract debts on his own account.

"I have always parties out scouting the woods from my post to Zawits, Sallady's, Jeynes's, etc., and again from my post to Fort Allen; those at Fort Allen take their tour down to Berks County, and also up to my Quarters again," etc.

Mr. Van Campen writes upon the margin of this letter, "It seems that Captain Shrawder has not received the clothing agreeable to the order of Councils."

On November 29, 1782, Mr. Van Campen writes to Council of Pennsylvania, in convention at Trenton. He has been, at their request, in Upper Smithfield and in New Jersey to obtain the best information in regard to the time of the purchase of and actual settlement of the upper parts of this county above Walpack Ferry. "The oldest men both in Jersey and New York whom he has spoken to are unable, by reason of age and infirmity, to attend at Trenton. I hope the bearer, James Vanaken, Esq., will fully and distinctly prove the actual settlement of the land on Delaware within the pretended claim of Connecticut.

"To Messrs. Bradford, Reed, Wilson and Sergeant."

The "Pennamite" and "Yankee" troubles seem to have been almost lost sight of by the people of the Minisink during the exciting period of the Revolution, but their interest in that milder form of contest revived as the greater subsided, and finally altogether disappeared.

John Van Campen lived at Shawnee, in a large stone building which was taken down by his grandson, the late George Van Campen Bush, about twenty years ago, the walls having become insecure. Mr. Van Campen united with the Smithfield Church April, 1775.

David Dills resided at "Dills' Ferry," now Portland, Northampton County. David lived many years in Smithfield. He married Rachel, daughter of Garret Brodhead, in 1787.

John Brown, one of the road commissioners named, came to Smithfield (now Stroud) in 1790. He was born May 21, 1746; died December 8, 1821. John, Michael and Jacob were his sons. Jacob Brown and John T. Bell were appointed associate judges at the organization of Monroe County, December 19, 1836. Hon. David Scott was the president judge. Jacob Brown was a very successful farmer. A portion of the land left his sons once belonged to the Brodhead estate. He died February 16, 1841, aged sixty-nine years. His children are as follows: Anna, who married Jacob Eilenberger; Daniel, who married Mary Hallock; Mary, who married Charles Brodhead; Robert, who married Rachel S. Burnett, of Bucks County; Edward, who married Emily Morgan; Ellen, who married David Keller.

General Robert Brown, lately deceased, was highly esteemed in this community. He was a man of integrity and moral excellence. The house in which General Brown was born, and in which he died, is situated on the elevation south of East Stroudsburg. It was erected in 1799. Near by stood the old house occupied by Daniel Brodhead, built in 1738. The fort or stockade built in 1756, the year after the house was attacked by the Indians, and to which the people of the neighborhood fled at the time, stood near, on the brow of the hill.

Applications for a public road or King's highway was made to the Governor and Council at Philadelphia April 6, 1771, from the Wind Gap by the most convenient and direct course to Wyoming. "The board taking the said petition into consideration and being of opinion that such road would be of great public utility, it is ordered that Aaron Depui, Garret Brodhead, Peter Kachline, Daniel Shoemaker, John Van Campen, Philip Johnson, John Seely and Michael Roup do view and lay out said road," etc.

Anthony Dutot constructed a road from his saw-mill, below where the Kittatinny House now stands, in 1798, to the site of his future "city," and a few years after obtained a charter for a toll-road; from thence it extended to the residence of Ulrick Hauser (River Farm), where it connected with the Shawnee and Tatemy's Gap road. This short road opened up an unfortunate intercourse between an irascible Frenchman and a contumacious German. They were the magnates of the vicinage, constituting an important portion of the population, and their families and employes the integral.

Anthony Dutot came from St. Domingo in 1793, having left there hastily, with others, when the order of possession in that island was reversed, when the servants became masters of the soil and the masters became fugitives. He was said to have been wealthy, and buried on his plantation a considerable amount of gold and silver, and brought with him what coin he could conveniently transport. Mr. Dutot was a man of culture and refinement, and after spending a short time in Philadelphia, he proceeded up the Delaware in search of a future home. He was impressed with the grandeur of the scenery at the Delaware Water Gap and eagerly made purchase of a large tract of land, previously considered as worthless, including the portion on which the Water Gap House is situated and the hills on the north side of the mountain, where he laid out a city, calling it after his own name and built a dozen or more small dwellings, which have all disappeared and the name of the place changed to Delaware Water Gap.

Mr. Dutot lived for some years on the bank of the river, near where the old saw-mill was located and but a short distance from the present boat-landing. Here was also the "toll-gate." His toll-road was never profitable and caused him much annoyance. Various devices were resorted to on the part of travelers to avoid payment, sometimes by driving rapidly through the gateway, at others by pretending not to understand his meaning.

Some years after Mr. Dutot's settlement here he made selection of Sunset Hill as his last resting-place, and some twenty years before his death purchased a bell and cannon, the former to be rung from the belfry of his own house, on which it was erected, and the latter to be fired over his grave when certain events, which he predicted, would transpire, affecting the prosperity of the place. Among these was the building of a railroad through the Gap and the landing of a steamboat at the wharf he made selection of on the bank of the Delaware. He died in 1841, and fifteen years after the whistle of the locomotive was first heard echoing through the gorge of the mountain, but the old man's repose was undisturbed by the ringing of bell or the firing of cannon over his solitary grave. The toll-road was superseded in 1823 by the construction of the present State road, along the southeastern slope of Sunset Hill. It was not till the year 1800 that the construction of a wagon road was undertaken through the Gap, and then by the subscription of individuals residing above and below the mountain. Previous to this there was a bridle-path over the old Indian trail. It was used as early as 1730, when the government of the province of Pennsylvania sent up agents[1] to the Minisink to dispossess certain persons of lands held by purchase of the Indians. This party, it is said, managed with great difficulty to lead their horses through the Gap. The Rev. David Brainerd, in a missionary tour amongst the Indians in the Minisink, passed through this, or one of the other "Gaps" in the mountain on his return to the "Forks," in 1744.

[1] Nicholas Scull and his assistant, John Lukens. Scull was elected surveyor-general to succeed William Parsons.

The road through the Gap was completed in the year 1800 by Abram B. Giles, under a contract with the citizens, and it appears by the following petition that the "citizens" defaulted:

"To the Honorable Jacob Rush and his Associates Esquires Judges of the court of Quarter Sessions and Common Pleas of the borough of Easton in and for the county of Northampton, August term, 1801.

"The Petitioner Humbly sendeth greeting! Gentlemen:

"Whereas, Public Notice by advertisement duly on the 30th July, 1800, for all persons to meet at the house of Benjamin Bonham in the Water Gap, on Delaware river, on the 9th of August following, on business concerning opening a road through said Gap, where attendance was given on said day and John Coolbaugh, Esq., was chosen chairman and Sam'l Seely, Esq., Sec. By which the meeting of the Inhabitants then present chose John Coolbaugh, Moses Chambers, Hugh Forman and Jacob Utt, Esquires, a Committee to lay out said Road by which I made contract in confidence of subscriptions, that for the sum of one thousand dollars, I would make a wagon Road through said Gap by subscriptions if obtained.

"Then at my own expense I went to work and completed said Road on said Terms and when done was inspected by said Committee to a full satisfaction and certified the same by a Certificate, but all subscriptions received or expected to be received amounts to only £200 7*s.* 6*d.*, which brings me to a loss of £174 12*s.* 6*d.*, which without said balance I cannot hold my own. I humbly therefore, crave the Honorable Court to take my agrievances into consideration and grant me such relief as they may think proper, and as in duty bound your Petitioner will humbly pray.

"Abraham B. Giles.

"Endorsed.

"Not allowed.

"Wm. Lattimer,
"Foreman."

This road left the river a short distance below, where the old saw-mill stood, passed near the Kittatinny House and over Sunset Hill by the Mountain House and intersecting the present road near the Church of the Mountain.

In the year 1781 there is the following entry in the town-book of Smithfield: "To cash paid John Vandermark for sundry work on the road for five years past, £37 6*s.* 6*d.*"

The highways were as badly neglected then as at the present time, especially if we take into account the depreciated value of the currency at the period named, as will appear by the following entry: "April 14, 1781, balance due from the township of Smithfield on settlement, £1737 5*s.* 1*d.*; changed from Continental to Hard Money, April 24, 1784, making them £33 3*s.* 3*d.*," a depreciation of about ninety-eight per cent.

Benjamin Bonham kept a small inn on the Water Gap road a short distance below Mr. Dutot's saw-mill. This was before the year 1800, as the preliminary meeting in reference to building the road through the Gap was held at his house. It was probably built the year before, in anticipation of the completion of the road. The house was afterwards kept by Asa Field. George Detrick subsequently built a larger house (about 1825) a short distance below, in the Gap, for the accommodation of raftsmen, who, until recent years, congregated there in great numbers.

It was customary to change the pilot or "steersman" at this place, as it seems to have been thought impossible, at that time, that one man could possess a knowledge of all the points on the entire course of the river requiring skillful pilotage. Those who ranked high in the profession were in great demand during the spring and fall freshets, and rafts were sometimes detained at the "Gap Eddy" for days, waiting for their return.

Captain George Detrick, above referred to, had command of a company formed in Smithfield in 1814, consisting of the following persons: Cornelius Coolbaugh (lieutenant) George Hauser, John Long, Abram De Pui, Joseph W. Drake, John Keller, James Brewer, William Sayre, George Felker, John Pugh, William Gordon, Abram Gordon, Frederick Brotzman, Jesse Lee, David Lee, Joshua Price, June 10, 1748. Lukens was elected surveyor-general April 9, 1781.

John Storm, John Huston, Adam Utt, Samuel Pugh, John V. Bush, George Walter, Peter Jayne, Henry Bush, John Rouse, John Bush, John Pitcherd, Levi Cortright, James Beloof, Peter Strunk, John F. Williams, William Williams, Jacob Transue.

Captain Detrick was a man above the ordinary size, six feet four inches in height, with a proportionably large frame, very erect and altogether a man of uncommonly fine presence. On their way to rendezvous, Marcus Hook, the party passed through Philadelphia, and were transported from there to their destination in Durham boats. During their stay in Philadelphia they were complimented on their fine appearance, nearly all the men being above the average size.

Captain Detrick was especially noticed and his martial bearing commented upon. He astonished the young natives, however, and suffered considerable annoyance by the crowd of boys on every side shouting "Goliath has broken out of the wax-works!" Lieutenant Coolbaugh, who was afterwards promoted to a captaincy, is said to have been a good officer. He was a brother of the Hon. John Coolbaugh, spoken of elsewhere.

Levi Cortwright, above named, was a son of Cobus Cortwright and Jane Shoemaker. Jane was called by the low Dutch "Yonachy." She was captured by the Indians in 1780, near the house of Jacob Place, when seven years of age. Her father and brother were killed at the same time. Yonachy was taken to Ohio and lived with the Indians till 1792, when she was brought to Philadelphia in the general exchange of prisoners which took place that year. She was then nineteen years of age, and had, of course, acquired many of the habits of her captors. She was wonderfully active and dexterous and could run with almost the speed of a deer, and astonished her neighbors by going round a field on top of a rail fence.

When her brother went to bring her from Philadelphia she failed to recognize him until he related the incident of her father's horse having been killed by jumping on a picket fence, which occurred just before her capture. The Indians with whom she lived treated her kindly and she assisted in the cultivation of corn on the Ohio, and it is vouched for by members of the family that some of the products of her labor were brought to her in the autumn, carried in sacks by the faithful natives.

Peter Kachlein was elected sheriff of Northampton County, commissioned October 4, 1764, and held the office for eight years. In the proceedings of Council in Philadelphia, April 11, 1780, Colonel Peter Kachlein, lieutenant of the county of Northampton, was written to, and forwarded a copy of the resolves of the Council for calling out the militia, and authorizing him to offer fifteen hundred dollars for every Indian or Tory prisoner, and one thousand dollars for any Indian scalp, and it was resolved that Colonel Peter Kachlein be directed to order out not exceeding one hundred men, including officers, to march immediately to the townships of Lower Smithfield, Delaware and Upper Smithfield, to repress the incursion of the savages, and Abram Cortwright is ordered to deliver to Colonel Peter Kachlein two hundredweight of powder, eight hundredweight of lead and four hundred flints for the use of the county of Northampton.

John Seely was appointed ensign in the Twelfth Regiment, commanded by Colonel William Cook, February 3, 1777. Sends to Council deposition respecting Colonel Jacob Stroud, which was read February 9, 1784. Appointed with Alexander Patterson, justice for Wyoming September 10, 1783. Kachlein, Seely and Patterson all resided in Smithfield at this time.

Michael Roup resided near Philip Bossard's (now Bossardsville), in Cherry Valley. On the 24th of April, 1757, he appeared before William Parsons, justice of the peace at Easton, and made deposition in relation to an Indian raid upon the inhabitants residing between Fort Hamilton and Fort Norris. Nine families hastily assembled at Philip Bossard's and brought with them such of their household goods as time permitted. Other families retired to the houses of Conrad Bittenbender and John McDowell (at the "Shaw Farm," now owned by Jacob H. Featherman). There were two Indian raids made to this neighborhood in the spring of 1757, in which Conrad Bittenbender, John Nolf, Jacob Roth, Peter Sloan, Christian Klein and two sons of Philip Bossard were killed; Peter Shaeffer, Abram Miller and his mother, Adam Snell's daughter, George Ebert and a Miss Klein were taken prisoners.

Philip Bossard was born in the Franco-German province of Alsace in 1706. He came to this country about 1730, and settled in Cherry Valley, at the present town of Bossardsville, in 1745, and died there in 1797.

Conrad Bittenbender settled in Cherry Valley about the same time as Philip Bossard. He came to this country from Hanover. As before stated, he was killed in one of the Indian raids into that valley in 1757. He was surrounded in sight of Bossard's house, to which he was hastening, none daring to go to his rescue, as they were few in number compared to their assailants.

John Chambers was a colonel in the army of the Revolution. When a sub-lieutenant he and Lieutenant John Wetzel, from Northampton County, under date July 8, 1778, wrote to Vice-President George Bryan, of Council, Philadelphia: "That a letter from Colonel Stroud, of the Sixth Battalion of Northampton County, informs them that a body of Indians and white men are upon their march to the settlements upon Delaware, they being discovered at the mouth of the Lackawaxen and moving towards Shaholy. By the best information we receive we learn that Wyoming is finally destroyed, upon which we have ordered out half of the battalion of the county; but by all accounts it is not a sufficient number to withstand their force, as we suppose this to be a different number from those at Wyoming, which by them that made their escape, their number is supposed to be between seven and eight hundred."

Colonel Rea writes to President Reed, June 1, 1780: "I have used my best endeavors to have relief sent to the townships of Smithfield and Delaware, and I have by express ordered one-half of Colonel Kerr's men to march to those parts and to be under the direction of Lieutenant Chambers until further orders, which I hope your Excellency and Council may approve."

Moses Chambers, a son of Colonel John Chambers, was a justice of the peace in Smithfield from 1796 to 1807. The family owned the property on the Delaware formerly owned by the late John V. Bush, two miles above Shawnee. John V. Bush married a daughter of Moses Chambers. Moses Chambers was married to Rhoda Riggs, November 15, 1785, by Rev. Elias Van Benscoten, in Smithfield.

In the list of marriages performed by Squire Chambers we find that of George Nyce to Elizabeth Shoemaker, daughter of Daniel Shoemaker; John Shoemaker to Sarah Smith, daughter of Francis Joseph Smith, M.D., February 1, 1801; Henry Shoemaker to Margaret Chambers, daughter of John Chambers, July 13, 1800; George Labar to Sarah Jayne, daughter of Isaac Jayne (no date); William Heft to Agnes Gonsalis, daughter of James Gonsalis, January 14, 1798; Michael Brown to Rebecca Johnson, daughter of Joseph Johnson, December 24, 1799; Susan Rosenkrans to Sarah Shoemaker, daughter of Henry Shoemaker, February 26, 1800; John Van Etten to Ann Labar, daughter of Daniel Labar, June 24, 1798.

Daniel Labar above mentioned, and an elder brother named Abraham, were sons of Daniel, and grandsons of Abraham Labar, who, with his brothers, Peter and Charles, came to this country about 1730. Abraham, the brother of Daniel, first above-named, entered the army of the Revolution at the commencement of the struggle for independence; he was a major before the date of July 25, 1776, and was appointed colonel in the spring of 1777.

Daniel Labar, the father of Colonel Abraham and Daniel, owned the property where the Water Gap Station of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad is located, and, it is said, cultivated, besides this plot, the islands in front. There were several large apple-trees growing near where the station buildings stand, from which the writer distinctly remembers obtaining fruit in his boyhood.

The late A. B. Burrell, in his "Memoirs of George Labar, the Centenarian," says that Abram Labar walled up the spring near the present residence of Richard Wilson, and that he lived here in 1741. Mr. Burrell probably meant Daniel, the father of Colonel Abraham and Daniel.

Daniel Labar, the last-named, the younger brother of Colonel Abraham, was born in 1763. He married Elizabeth Chambers in 1786. Rev. Elias Van Benscoten performed the marriage ceremony. His brothers and sisters are as follows:

Catharine married Wm. Steward, a British soldier; George married Sarah Jayne, 1800; Abram married Miss Casebeer; Jacob married Rachel Smith; John married Rachel Brown; Elizabeth married Aaron Depui; Sophia married George Spragle; Ann married John Van Etten, in 1798

From this time we discern the name occasionally written La Bar and sometimes Le Bar.

The following facts in relation to Daniel Labar, obtained from an Easton paper, are of interest.

"Daniel Labar, a resident of Smithfield township, Northampton County, says that he was born in the borough of Easton, in Northampton County, on the 25th day of August, A.D. 1763, and entered the service of the United States under the following-named officers, and served as herein stated: In the month of August, A.D. 1779, he was drafted and called out in the militia of Pennsylvania, under Captain Timothy Jayne, Lieutenant John Fiske, in the regiment commanded by Colonel Jacob Stroud, and marched from Smithfield township, his place of residence, now in Middle Smithfield township, and was there stationed at a fort near where Judge Coolbaugh now resides; that he remained in and about the fort to protect the inhabitants from the Indians until the two months for which he was drafted had expired, and was then discharged and went home, and was immediately put upon the minute list, as a minute man, to be ready at a minute's warning, with gun, etc., to repel the incursions of the savages, which were there and at that neighborhood frequent and daring. That he continued in the service as a minute man, Indian spy or scout, under the command of Colonel Jacob Stroud, for the full term of one year and ten months (till the taking of the army under Lord Cornwallis, in October, 1781). That during the time of his service as a minute man or Indian spy he was frequently and repeatedly called out to repel the invasions of the savages. Once he was ordered out with others by Colonel Stroud, under Lieutenant Fish, to John Larner's, at the foot of Pocono Mountain, in said county, where they found the said John Larner, his father, his son and son's wife and children killed by the savages. Remained there some time, and in the neighborhood after the Indians, and then ordered up Brodhead's Creek, in said county, to scour the woods, which they did, from and up the said creek to the Big Ridge, as it was called, and then came home; and at another time during the said service he was ordered out by the said Colonel Jacob Stroud, under the command of Captain Abraham Miller, up the Delaware River to Vannetten's Fort, in now Delaware township, Pike County, and was at the fort when the attack was made upon it. At another time he was ordered to the fort at a place now called Stroudsburg, and stationed to guard the fort and at other times frequently called out, under the same officer, for a week or two at a time, to protect the inhabitants; that he was always ready and always did turn out during said service, when warned. During the summer he did nothing but watch and keep himself in readiness. He thinks that during the said term he was in actual service more than half of the time, but to be certain, he only swears to one-half; that he never received any pay or remuneration for such service.

"Daniel Labar."

Daniel La Bar was the father of John Chambers La Bar, and grandfather of Judge J. Depui La Bar and Daniel La Bar, now living at Shawnee.

Jacob La Bar, who married Rachel Smith, daughter of Francis Joseph Smith, M.D., is the father of the highly-esteemed Mrs. Jeannette Hollinshead (widow of Stroud J. Hollinshead), now living at Stroudsburg.

George La Bar, brother of Daniel and Jacob above named, was the father of the late Judge Henry M. La Bar, George La Bar and Mrs. Dr. P. M. Bush.

J. Depue Le Bar.—The family represented by the subject of this sketch was one of the earliest to settle in Monroe County. The name is of French origin and has been variously spelled La Barre, Le Barre and La Bar. The first representatives of the family in this country were Peter, Charles and Abram La Bar, who emigrated about 1730, and landed at Philadelphia. After a few days of rest they determined to follow up the Delaware River, and make a settlement on the very outskirts of civilization. In three days they arrived at the forks of the Delaware and Lehigh Rivers, which was then the principal white settlement, the present site of Easton being occupied by an Indian village. Continuing their journey, they at length came in view of the Blue Ridge barrier. There were some small settlements back from the river, but none on the river above Williamsburg, except that of Nicholas Depui, who was comfortably planted at what is now Shawnee. After viewing the country between the river and the mountain for a day or two, they pitched upon a site for their cabin about three-quarters of a mile from the river, on a somewhat elevated spot, in what is now Mount Bethel township, Northampton County, and soon had their primitive homestead erected. The Indians were their only near neighbors, and these they managed to make their true friends by many little acts of kindness. Here they dwelt together a number of years, engaged in the various occupations of pioneer life, until finally, as the tide of emigration from the north and south began to reach them, they each married a German or Dutch wife, and found it advisable to separate. Charles remained in the old cabin homestead in Mount Bethel. Peter pushed a little farther on and bought a tract of land above the mountains of the Indians, southwest of where Stroudsburg now stands, and adjoining a tract Colonel Stroud purchased some time after. Here he cleared up a good home, after many years of hard labor, and raised a large family of children. Abram planted himself above the Delaware Water Gap Notch, not far from the Delaware Water Gap depot, where he lived many years and raised a large family. He cleared the island just above the Gap, which, with the garden flat around his house, made quite a snug farm. He lived there in 1741, when the Governor sent Nicholas Scull up to look after the state of things in the Smithfields.

It was from one of these brothers, probably Abraham, that Daniel La Bar, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, descended. He was early identified with Colonel Stroud in his land operations and business enterprises, served as a scout and guard against the Indians, and carried the mail for many years between Shawnee and Stroudsburg. Circumstances all seem to indicate that he was a son of Abraham La Bar, as the tradition in his branch of the family is that his father first settled in Easton, then moved above Wind Gap, and finally located where E. T. Croasdale's farm residence now stands, all of which facts are confirmed by the historical account of the family. Daniel La Bar married a Miss Chambers for his first wife, and for his second Cornelia Van Etten. He had two sons, John C. and Daniel E. La Bar, the latter of whom removed to Wisconsin, where his descendants still live. John C. was the father of our subject, and married Sarah, daughter of John Depue. He was a farmer by occupation, and had six children, of whom two, Hiram and Benjamin, died in infancy. The others were J. Depue Le Bar, Daniel, Moses (deceased) and Samuel (deceased). John C. La Bar died March 19, 1865, and his wife October 5, 1876.

J. Depue Le Bar was born at Pahaquarry, Warren County, New Jersey, July 31, 1814. His early years were passed upon his father's farm at that place, where he also received an ordinary common-school education. He began at the age of sixteen to run on a raft, carrying lumber down the Delaware River to Philadelphia, and still makes regular journeys at the proper season of the year, being considered one of the most expert steersmen on the river. When about twenty years of age he rented the farm of his grandfather, Daniel, in Smithfield township, and engaged in cultivating that for several years. He then bought a farm in Middle Smithfield township, containing between seventy and eighty acres, and now occupied by George Schuman. On August 13, 1836, he married Sarah A., daughter of George V. and Maria (Stetler) Bush, and granddaughter of George Bush, an early settler from Germany, and Mary Van Campen, his wife. Her mother is still living in the ninetieth year of her age. After his marriage Judge Le Bar resided upon his farm for several years, and then disposed of it, and removed to Pahaquarry, on the New Jersey side of the river, where he remained for eight years engaged in farming and lumbering. He then purchased the old Bush property, at Shawnee, where he followed farming for twelve years, when he rebuilt and occupied his present residence at Shawnee.

In the fall of 1854 he commenced to keep a country store at Shawnee in connection with his son-in-law, George F. Heller, the firm being known as Le Bar & Heller. Mr. Heller subsequently removed to Stroudsburg, and the store has since been run by Judge Le Bar alone. The latter, during his long residence in Smithfield, has been one of the most useful and influential citizens of the township. A Democrat in politics, he has never been a seeker after place, yet has been honored by his fellow-citizens with several positions of honor and trust. He was for eighteen years postmaster at Shawnee, has held various township offices, and in 1882 was elected one of the lay judges of Monroe County for five years, and is at present serving on the bench. He has served as a member of the board of directors of the Stroudsburg Bank since its organization, with the exception of omitting the necessary one year in four required by its charter; and during the war was active in furnishing all the quotas of volunteers required from Smithfield township. He is an earnest and zealous member of the Shawnee Presbyterian Church, of which he has been an elder for about thirty years, assisted in building the present house of worship, and is held in general respect and esteem for his integrity and uprightness of character. His children are eight in number, namely,—Sarah M., wife of George F. Heller, of Stroudsburg; Elizabeth, wife of Colonel John Schoonover, of Oxford Furnace, N. J.; Susan, wife of Samuel D. Overfield, of Delaware Water Gap; Dr. Amzi Le Bar, of Stroudsburg; Margaret, widow of Charles S. Hill, formerly of Oxford Furnace, N. J.; Mary, wife of Rev. F. P. Dalrymple, pastor of Shawnee Presbyterian Church; Hiram, farming on the homestead at Shawnee; and Franklin, general agent of the Providence Life Insurance Co., of Philadelphia, for New Jersey, residing at Pennington, in that State.

After the country south of the mountain was better known to the isolated dwellers in the Minisink, the river Delaware became the popular medium of communication, as it afforded an easier and more speedy means of transporting to market commodities which had hitherto found an outlet over the "old Mine road" to Esopus.

The first craft used for the purpose was the "dug-out," an exaggerated form of canoe, made from the body of a large log excavated and flattened on the bottom to prevent its rolling in the water. The dug-out would carry three or four tons, and with two men using both oars and pike-poles, as occasion served, would make the voyage to Easton and back from the Lower Minisink in three to four days. This kind of craft, as a means of transport, preceded the raft and "Durham boats," the latter becoming subsequently the principal method of freighting to and from the Upper Delaware. The Durham boat had its name and origin at Durham Furnace, on the Delaware, below Easton.

It is said that the first boat was built by Robert Durham, the manager and engineer of the furnace, and after whom the furnace was probably named. This was in the year 1750. The Durham boats were used in the transportation of flour from Van Campen's mill, at Shawnee, to Philadelphia as early as 1758, and later, in conveying supplies and building material as far up the Delaware as Cannonsville, in the State of New York. In the memory of persons living in the vicinity, these boats were used by the old and respectable firm of Bell & Thomas, at Experiment Mills, in transporting flour to Philadelphia and bringing up supplies for the neighborhood. The place of landing was at the mouth of Brodhead's Creek, and was known as the "Flower Garden." David Bogert, Jacob Lamb and Cornelius Coolbaugh are remembered as captains of Durham boats.

From a letter received from an old friend, Hon. Paul S. Preston, of Stockport, Wayne County, Pa., since deceased, the following reminiscences are obtained: "In thinking of the Water Gap, I recall many pleasant memories of early days. In the month of August, 1803, I passed through the Gap in a canoe or dug-out on my way from the Upper Delaware. We stopped for the night at Nicholas Depui's. The canoe was loaded with hides consigned to Peter Snyder, a tanner, residing at Easton. The canoe-men were Nathan and John Thomas, whose descendants still reside on the Upper Delaware. I was consigned to my grandfather, in Bucks County, in charge of Peggy Krouskop. The next night, after leaving Depui's, we stayed at Mrs. Sherlock's, some five miles above Easton. The canoe returned from Easton loaded with groceries, etc., procured from Michael Hart and Absalom Reeder (father of Governor Reeder), and Mrs. K., with her hopeful charge, took passage in a Durham boat for Tuckahoe, since known by the raftsman as 'Lower Black's Eddy,' where we left the river for my grandfather's, some four miles west of that place. Four years afterwards I made another trip to Easton in a canoe, in company with my father; Nathan and Brom Cole as canoe-men. At this last trip I was left several days in charge of Jane Depui (daughter of Nicholas Depui), at her father's. I still retain a vivid recollection of her queenly presence, and how she read and understood me. She furnished me with interesting books during my father's absence, and consequently I did not wander far from her apron-strings, and she reported me a good boy on my father's return from Stroudsburg; I never met her afterwards." Jane, Rachel and Ann were daughters of Nicholas Depui. Rachel married the Rev. Jacob Field, and Ann married Dr. Erb, both known and remembered as zealous, consistent Christians. Jane died a few years after the circumstance narrated above. They were all three distinguished for their intelligence and fine personal appearance.

The roads constructed in the Minisink prior to the year 1800 were little more than bridle-paths, and the streams were without bridges, so that wagons were not in use, excepting very rudely-built carts, made entirely of wood, for service on the farm only. The wheels were solid, made from cross-sections cut from a large log, with holes through the centre to admit the axle. The products of the land, the hides and furs of wild animals, etc., were conveyed to market in winter on sleds, while the lighter articles for sale or barter were conveyed on horseback.

As in all newly-settled countries, this was, from necessity, the favorite mode of travel. All classes became fearless riders, and it was not unusual to see two and sometimes three of a family on one horse riding to church, to visit friends or perhaps to join a neighborhood gathering for a "corn-husking" or evening's entertainment.

It was no uncommon occurrence for the young women of the times—three or four in a party—to make a visit to a neighbor, a day's journey distant, on horseback. Neighbors in those days were not the less neighborly by being widely separated from each other.

On the 1st of March, 1815, there was an act passed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, authorizing the incorporation of "The Smithfield Turnpike Road Company." The commissioners named in the act were Thomas Armat, Daniel Stroud, Jacob Brown, James Burson, John Houser, Evan Thomas, Samuel Stokes, John Baker, Peter Kocher, John P. Arndt and Stephen Tuttle. "The said road shall commence near Pimple Hill, in Northampton County, thence to the borough of Stroudsburg, and from thence through Dutotsburg to the house of Henry Dills, in Upper Mount Bethel township" (now Portland). It is not known what defeated the purpose of this corporation, or whether the company was ever organized.

Thomas Armat, one of the commissioners, resided in Philadelphia. He owned the land that still lies to the common, between the road that passes through the "Gap" and the river, commencing near the Methodist Church. "Armat's Landing" is on the property. A large part of it has been unoccupied since Mr. Armat purchased, about ninety years ago. Mrs. Logan, a daughter of James J. Skerrett and granddaughter of Thomas Armat, is the present owner.

TAXABLES IN 1786.—Further information as to who were the early or eighteenth century settlers in Smithfield is afforded by the following list of taxables for 1786, made by James Schoonover, assessor. This return shows the names of the taxable inhabitants at that time, their occupations or professions, the number of acres of land held by each taxable, also number of horses, horned cattle, grist-mills, saw-mills, negro servants and rented land. Where no remark is made in relation to occupation farming may be understood :

The total number of taxables is one hundred and fifty-seven, and they are assessed with fifteen thousand eight hundred and twenty-six acres of land in actual occupancy, and six hundred and thirty-five acres of rented lands. They are also assessed with two hundred and ninety-two horses and three hundred and seventy horned cattle. Benjamin Van Campen is assessed with three negro servants and John Van Campen with two. Garret Brodhead, John Gusten, William Gooden, Morgan Mordecai and Jacob Stroud are assessed each with one saw-mill, and John Van Campen, Jacob Stroud and Daniel Shoemaker are each assessed with a grist-mill.

First Ferry on the Upper Delaware.—On an old map, preserved in the surveyor-general's office at Burlington, is laid down "Nanatumam Ferry," across the Delaware, which was possibly in use as early as 1736. It was owned by James Gould, and is supposed to have had the same location as the present "Walker's Ferry," in Pahaquarry township, Warren County, then in Hunterdon County, and later in Sussex. The ferry touches the Pennsylvania shore a short distance below the old Depui mansion, near Shawnee. James Gould's plantation of one hundred and fifty acres was located a short distance above the ferry, and is now owned by the heirs of the late John C. La Bar. The land was located and the survey made to Mr. Gould by Samuel Green, deputy surveyor, in 1730. Subsequently another tract was surveyed to James Gould, as appears from the following record found in Hunterdon County, N. J.: "In pursuance of thy order to me directed, bearing date y^e^ sixteenth day of December, Anno. 1735, requiring me to survey unto James Gould the full quantity of two hundred acres of land anywhere within the western division of the Province of New Jersey, therefore I have surveyed part of the same to the s^d^ James Gould, it being a Peninsula above the falls of the Delaware, lying a little below the s^d^ James Gould ferry, which is called or known by the name of Nanatumam, and begins at the uppermost end thereof, and so runs round the whole Peninsula by y^e^ several courses of the same, containing in the whole twenty-three acres, one rood and thirty perches, besides allowance for highways.

"Surveyed by Joseph De Cou, deputy surveyor, March ye 26th, 1736."

This second survey shows that Mr. Gould had a ferry in 1736. The first tract surveyed to Mr. Gould in 1730 was the second tract of land that was located in what is now Pahaquarry township, N. J., the first being that located by John Budd for the children of Elizabeth Mowry, and comprises what for nearly one hundred and fifty years past has been known as the Old Van Campen tract. "Nanatumam" is an Indian name, the significance of which seems to have been known only to the natives, and has passed away with the people who once gave it utterance, and had the name not been preserved in the surveyor-general's office, it would doubtless never again have been brought to recollection.

The Indian village of Pohoqualin was situated a few miles above Nanatumam Ferry, on the farm of the late Judge Ribble, where traces of the old burying-ground, now a cultivated field, may yet be seen, and where a few scattered stone implements, the enduring relics of a bygone race, may still be found.

Indian Graves at Pahaquarry.—In the summer of 1843 I visited the Indian burial-ground of this place. It is situated about seven miles north of the Delaware Water Gap, on the river Delaware, and upon an elevation of two or three hundred feet, beneath which is a beautiful strip of table land extending along the river. This burial-place was known to most of the inhabitants of the region for many years, but remained undisturbed until recently. There is quite a number of bodies deposited here, but, only three had been up to this time disinterred. From accounts they must have yielded some interesting relics. But the persons obtaining them, not appreciating their value, have suffered them to be squandered and lost.

These graves were opened by Andrew Ribble or some of his family. The articles which I saw are as follows: A large string of beads variously colored, principally green and red, of glass, and others of stone and clay; several clay ornaments similar in shape to the beads, though much larger; the image of an owl, made also of clay; and several round pieces made of clay about the size of an American half-dollar, dotted round the edge and twice through the centre, and appear as though they may have been attached to their blanket or other part of the dress. A great number of pieces of pipe and stems were also found, with other fragments of clay, which was hard to tell of what they were composed.

There was also found in one of these graves several articles, evidently obtained from the white race, among which were several small round bells, eaten through with the rust, fragments of blankets, several brass plates, etc. In one of the graves opened, which I did not see, were found two guns, several brass plates containing the crucifix, brass tobacco-boxes, etc.

INDIAN SEPULCHRE AT THE LAKE OF THE MOUNTAIN.

An Old-time Letter from John Arndt to the Rev. John Heckewelder.

"EASTON, Nov. 15, 1801.

"MR. JOHN HECKEWELDER.—My Dear Sir;—In many things, but particularly in that respecting Indian customs and antiquities, you are my oracle, to which your goodness has give me permission to approach and hear the sublime responses. I have again a question to propose for your solution or conjecture. To obtain this I deem it necessary to give you a kind of historical introduction to the questions I am about to propose. A few weeks ago a man went to the top of the Blue Mountain, about four or five miles northeast of the Delaware Water Gap, to hunt bees. In his excursions he came to a known lake or pond of water nearly on the very summit of the mountain, near the edge of which he beheld, on a precipice, a parcel of stones, apparently collected and piled up by the hands of man. The bee-hunter's curiosity was excited, and he began to separate the loose stones, when he beheld the skeleton of a man (or woman), which frightened him so that he fled from the place, and gave a relation of his adventure to his neighbors, many of whom agreed to bear him company. Thus reinforced, the discoverer, on the Sunday following, ascended the mountain and reached his formerly discovered sepulcher, for such it turned out to be. The men then went to work and removed all the smaller loose stones. They then observed a layer of long, flat stones, part of which they also removed. They then began to make their observations of the object before them. The stones they had removed they found to have been placed on a large rock, which had been rent apart for a considerable length, and wide enough conveniently to place the body of a man. In this opening between the perpendicular sides they found the bones or skeleton of a human body. At the head and feet were placed flat stones, perpendicularly, just wide enough to close the space between the two sides of the rock. On the top were also placed flat stones, reaching from side to side of the space where the skeleton lay, thereby leaving a vacant space between the covering stones and the bones; on the top, over these covering flat stones, and at the ends of the head and foot-stones, were placed the piles of the smaller ones.

"With the bones were found a small brass kettle, some beads, some circular bones or ivory of the size of a dollar in thickness, through which are pierced two holes, through the diameter. Also a parcel of the same kind of bones or ivory, shaped like pipe-stems, about four and a half inches long, with a tubular opening lengthwise through them, but do not appear to have been used for smoking, from the color of the bone. The brass kettle was claimed by the bee-hunter and discoverer of the grave. The other trinkets fell into the hands of a friend, who has since forwarded them to me, and I have them ready to show you whenever I shall have the pleasure of seeing you here. Nearly right down the mountain from the grave, on the flats or lowlands, there was a large Indian burying-ground. Now after these historical facts, as related to me, I come to the propositions of those, to me, mysterious questions, hoping you will have the goodness to impart your opinion thereon to me. Could the place have been a special choice of the Indian?

"Here was a lake with plenty of fish, abundance of good, large huckleberries, excellent hunting-grounds, etc. Can it be presumed that he was a noted chief or warrior to whom such a distinguished respect was paid to deposit so much nearer to Heaven and the Great Spirit? Was it common to deposit great men in vaults, as this has been? Where could the brass kettle have been got, that was found with him, unless we presume he was buried in modern times, at least after the settlement of Menahachtanienk by the Hollanders. The other trinkets which I have got do not look like European manufacture. What was their use? Why were they put in the grave with the corpse? If they were Indian manufacture, where did they procure the implements with which they bored the holes through the bones or ivory?

"Any other remarks that may occur to you, that may enlighten my ignorant mind, shall be thankfully received.

"I am, my dear sir, your very affectionate friend,

"JOHN ARNDT."

NOTE.—The lake referred to in the foregoing letter is now known as the "Lake of the Mountain." It is a sheet of pure, transparent water surrounded by an irregular curved outline of foliage, and clear, bare fragments and masses of gray sandstone, strangely and unaccountably situated upon the very summit of the mountain on the New Jersey side of the river. A mirror of beauty in the solitary wilderness—covering an area of some fifty acres—reflecting the image of the clouds, the only object above its fair surface, beneath which, in its transparent depth, the perch roam in solitary and peaceful independence.

John Arndt, the author of the letter, was an officer in the army of the Revolution during the entire war, and after its close rendered distinguished civil service. He died a few years after this letter was written, at Easton, where some of his descendants still reside.

Rev. John Heckewelder was for many years the beloved missionary from the Moravian Church at Bethlehem among the Lenni Lenapi or Delaware Indians, and was the well-known author of "Indian Nations" and other kindred works. He was of German origin, though born at Bedford, England, in 1743, and died at Bethlehem, January 3, 1823.

The "Bee-hunters," as ascertained by the writer of this note, were John Place, Barnet Walter, Henry Shoemaker and Joseph Michaels, the well-known and jovial fiddler at country dances. Michaels was fourteen years of age at the time of the "Bee-hunt" and remembered well the circumstance of finding the Indian grave. He died a few years ago. B.

POST-OFFICE.—The first post-office in Smithfield was established at Dutotsburg (now Delaware Water Gap), on September 18, 1806. Anthony Dutot was appointed postmaster and held the office for eighteen years. The mail was carried from Easton on horseback, and from Dutotsburg to Stroudsburg by a man on foot. A post route was established, soon after, to Milford via Shawnee and Bushkill.

Mr. Dutot predicted at the time that the mail would be brought from Easton on four-horse coaches, which prediction he lived to see fulfilled; and then again foretold its delivery in a railway coach, which became an established fact in the year 1857, sixteen years after his death.

At the time of the establishment of the post-office the road through the "Gap" had been six years built, but the pass had been traversed by men on horseback many years before, over the Indian trail that Mr. Heckewelder states to have extended "from the mouth of their (the Indian) national river as far west as the Alleghenies." In 1730 a party in the employment of the province passed through the Gap on horseback on their way to Nicholas De Pui's. There seems, however, to have been very little intercourse between the dwellers in the Minisink and the outside world; and all communication was by messengers who could perform the laborious journeys only on foot or on horseback, as wagons were then hardly thought of. The most convenient point for supplies for the earliest settlers was Esopus, on the Hudson, one hundred miles distant. Philadelphia was nearer, but that "village," as New Yorkers still delight to call it, was unheard of by this isolated people. Bethlehem then had no existence, but quite soon after its commencement, in 1742, a very friendly intercourse seems to have been established between the two settlements, and Bethlehem became after a time the place of barter for the dwellers in the Minisink.

With the present mail facilities we are led to wonder how our ancestors could, for three-quarters of a century, manage to do without the receipt of letters or papers; in fact, without any knowledge of the outside world except such as was (rarely) received through messengers sent for a special purpose. But to those who reside in the two great cities, who may now read the morning papers at breakfast that were printed one hundred miles away, it must appear quite as surprising that "in the year 1739 the mail was carried between New York and Philadelphia once a week on horseback during the summer, and Governor Morris submitted the proposition to Postmaster-General Spotswood as to whether it be not fit to direct that the rider stay one night in such towns where the Governor happens to be resident."

"In the year 1737 Benjamin Franklin, as postmaster at Philadelphia, advertises that Henry Pratt is appointed riding postmaster for all the stages between Philadelphia and Newport, in Virginia, who sets out about the beginning of every month, and returns in twenty-four days."

SMITHFIELD CHURCH.—The first church in the Pennsylvania portion of the Minisink was without doubt one of the four churches built conjointly by the settlers on both sides of the river and was of the Reformed Dutch organization. The probable date of the erection of the building was 1741–42. Like most houses in a newly-settled country, it was a log structure and stood on the northeastern border of the Walter farm, nearly two miles above Shawnee, on the bank of the stream that crosses the road near the Weaver farm-house, and about half-way between the road and the river.

The first minister visiting the Minisink came from Kingston, on the Hudson. Rev. Petrus Vas baptized three persons August 19, 1716, and four January 5, 1717, and five in January, 1718. These baptisms were in the Machackemech (Port Jervis) and Minisink (Montague) congregations. Georg Wilhelm Mancius, of the Kingston Church, visited the Minisink August 23, 1737, and is supposed to have organized the four historic churches—Machackemech, Minisink, Walpack and Smithfield—about the same time.

Rev. S. W. Mills, in an historical address delivered at Bushkill January 13, 1874, says: "The precise date of organization is not known, but the minutes of consistory date back to August 23, 1737, at which time a consistory was found in each church performing consistorial acts. Mancius, as it would seem from the record of baptisms in his handwriting, was in the habit of coming here regularly every six months (in May and November) from their first organization to preach and administer the sacraments, until they obtained a minister of their own," which was in 1741, when John Casparus Fryenmuth became the first regular pastor of the four churches. The first record reads as follows.

"Whereas, Some among us are unwilling to remunerate the minister who is coming to officiate among us, and yet wish to avail themselves of his services, it was approved and resolved by the Consistory: That every one dwelling among us requiring the services of the minister shall pay for the baptism of a child six shillings, and those who live without our bounds shall pay for the baptism of a child three shillings. Signed in behalf of others,

"Georg Wilhelm Mancius.

"Done in Consistory August 23, 1737."[1]

During the four years that Dominie Mancius visited the Minisink Churches he baptized one hundred and two persons. J. C. Fryenmuth (written at a later period Fryenmoet) was found among the people, a young man, and was sent to Amsterdam, and there educated for four years by the Minisink Churches, at the end of which time he returned and commenced his labors, June 1, 1741, at the age of twenty, and labored faithfully for fifteen years in the four churches, extending over a territory that reached from Westbrookville on the north to Smithfield on the south, a distance of fifty miles. The Smithfield Church paid their quota of the preacher's salary, seventeen pounds and ten shillings, in "proclamation money." At a meeting of the consistory of the four churches appears the following:

"The Reverend Consistory of Smithfield hath concluded, with the consent of the minister, to contribute to his support £17 10*s*. Proclamation money."

The first reference to Smithfield Church, where it is specifically named, occurs December 26, 1743, where

"The Consistory resolved that the acts of the Church of Smithfield passed December 26, 1743, should be disannulled." "The Consistory also fixed the time for dispensing the Lord's Supper (Avondmaal) in each church, viz.: On the incoming Easter (Paasch-cag) at Manissinck, in June at Smithfield, in September at Machackemech and Christmas (Kersdag) at Walpack. The Communion in each church to be preceded by family visitation and preparatory service. March 31, 1746. At a meeting of the Consistories it was resolved, That all the transactions of the Consistories shall be signed by the minister and the eldest elder of all the churches.

"J. C. Fryenmuth, President and Scribe.
"William Cole,
"Hendrick Cortrecht,
"Moses Depui."

May 5, 1746, the names of Nicolass Dupui, Direk Westbroeck, Jan Van Kampen and Jacob Westfael appear to a resolution wherein the act of subordination to the Classis of Amsterdam is ordered to be submitted to be signed and established by the neighborhoods of the four churches. Benjamin Depuy and Moses Depuy appear to have been elders and Lambart Brynck and James Hyndshaw deacons of the Smithfield Church.

The following record appears for January 13, 1748:

"I bind myself by my signature to the four united churches of Smithfield, Walpack, Mennissinck and Machackemech (pursuant with an obligation of the

In 1750 William Allen conveyed five acres of land to Nicholas Depui and others, in trust for the use of a "Presbyterian Meeting-House," and in 1752 a building known by after generations as the "Old Stone Church" was erected near the Indian town of Shawnee. The three persons principally concerned in the building of this church were Nicholas De Pui, Samuel De Pui and Abraham Van Kampen. Their initials and the date of erection are cut on the corner-stone, which now has a place in the new building, erected a century later.

This old stone church stood as a monument to the devotion of its worthy founders, and, with the original log church and the present structure, represents a period of one hundred and forty-four years. Who shall estimate the value to this community of this century and a half of church organization? Blessings have attended it, and must attend the community, and especially the descendants of those whose first thoughts in their pioneer life, as in this case, were directed to means for securing the ministration of the sacred Word, and for maintaining and having dwell with them one suited to the high calling.

The old stone church was typical of the church architecture of the time of its erection. It possessed the elevated pulpit, reached by a flight of steps, and above the speaker's head the sounding-board of bygone days. It was originally designed as a Presbyterian Church, but does not appear to have been organized as such until many years after, but was free to all Christian denominations.

The Reformed Dutch, who, under John Casparus Fryenmuth, worshipped in the log church, two miles above, since 1741, now assembled at the stone church and continued under the various pastorates for more than half a century.

[1] Extracts from translations of original records made by Rev. J. B. Ten Eyck and published by W. H. Nearpass, of Port Jervis.

The following is a list of the clergymen of that denomination who are known to have served in the church of Smithfield: Rev. J. C. Fryenmuth from 1741 to 1756 (nine or ten years of this time he preached in the log church erected in 1741); Rev. J. H. Goetchin, for six months ending June, 1757; Rev. Thomas Romeyn, eleven years, ending with 1781; Rev. D. Romeyn, three years, ending with 1775; Rev. Elias Van Bunschooten's first term of service was from 1786 to 1797. He frequently visited the church after this date, the last recorded August 22, 1813.

Rev. Benjamin Dubois, of Monmouth County, N. J., visited the Smithfield Church in 1788, and baptized Juliana, daughter of Henry Shoemaker and Blandina Van Campen, Philip Shrawder and wife acting as sponsors.

Rev. Mr. Darrien was here in 1789, and baptized Sarah, daughter of John Coolbaugh and Susanna Van Campen.

Rev. Mr. Hunt was here, in 1799, and baptized, among others, Eliza, daughter of John Stroud and Elizabeth Depui; Anna, daughter of George Labar and Sarah Jayne; and John and Moses, sons of John Coolbaugh and Susanna Van Campen.

The two clergymen last named were probably not of the Reformed Dutch Church, but of the Presbyterian. Jacobus Romine, Reformed Dutch, was here temporarily in 1805.

PRESBYTERIAN CLERGYMEN IN SMITHFIELD.—Azariah Horton, a Presbyterian missionary and friend of Rev. David Brainerd, visited Smithfield in 1741, and remained here about two weeks. Rev. J. Kirby Davis says,—"He set out in 1741 from Kaunameek and came by what is known as the Mine road from Kingston to this place. He preached in a log school-house and probably passed a Sabbath here. He went to the Forks of the Delaware to confer with the Indians in regard to having Brainerd preach among them."

David Brainerd preached here to the Indians in 1744. He came down the old Mine road from the Hudson. Brainerd had a missionary station at what is now known as Allen's Ferry, seven miles below the Water Gap, on the Delaware. The Indian town was called Sakhau- watung, meaning in their language the mouth of a creek where some one resides. There was another Indian town called Clistowacke, where Brainerd built a cottage and lived for a time. It was situated near the three brick churches in Mount Bethel township, near the residences of Mr. Baker and Mr. Skinner, fifteen miles south of the Water Gap. Moses Funda Tatemy acted as interpreter for Rev. David Brainerd and was also interpreter at several of the treaties held with the Indians. "Tatemy's Gap", on the Blue Mountain, three miles west of the Delaware Water Gap, was named after him.

DAVID BRAINERD, THE MISSIONRAY—HIS FIRST VISIT TO NORTHAMPTON COUNTY—INDIAN VILLAGES CLISTOWACKI AND SAKHAUWOTUNG.[1]

On a Saturday afternoon in May, one hundred and forty years ago, a solitary horseman rode down the Delaware into this county, intending to make it his home. He was refined, pious and intelligent, although he had been refused the diploma he sought at Yale College. He came on a new and rare errand. At this time Washington, a lad of twelve, was conning his arithmetic, Franklin was a youthful printer, and the parents of Napoleon were yet unborn. But in drawing out the great forces that stir the world, and mark the track of history, this pensive rider was destined to bear as full a share, in his way, as these illustrious men afterward did in their distinguished career, although his course ended before he was thirty, and before they were heard of. This man came simply to preach the gospel to the Indians, who listened to his sincere appeals with ready earnestness. His name was David Brainerd; and, with the single exception of the journey of Count Zinzendorf from Bethlehem to Wyoming, in 1742, this was the first missionary tour on record in our country.

Brainerd soon found a home and built a cabin on the south bank of Martin's Creek, seven miles above Easton, on land now owned by David W. Howell and Abram Shimer. Near by was the little Indian village of Clistowacki, which meant "fine land." All his letters written were dated "The Forks of the Delaware," which was a general term for all the region about here, since the Lehigh River was known at the "West Branch of the Delaware."

But his earliest residence was at Sakhauwotung, a term that occurs but once in all his record. Where was this village? It is not found on any map now existing. While we then search for it as best we may, let us at the same time seek also for Opeholhaupung, the place on the Susquehanna at which he visited another tribe in the following autumn.

[1] By Prof. Coffin of Lafayette College.

Several writers have shown great lack of care and apparent thoughtlessness in hastily locating these places, and so have produced a confusion that has caused several towns to set up rival claims for the honor of Brainerd's residence therein. The first point has at times been variously located all the way from the headwaters of the Delaware to Easton, while Opeholhaupung in like manner has glided along the Susquehanna from Wyoming to Shamokin, until anchored at Wapwallopen, in Luzerne County.

In Brainerd's minute memoranda the one mention of Sakhauwotung is that he preached there on Sunday, May 13, on the termination of his journey from Fishkill, N. Y., "across the woods from the Hudson, about a hundred miles, through a desolate and hideous country, above New Jersey, where were very few settlements;" and in which journey he suffered much fatigue and hardship, "being alone in a strange wilderness." He says: "On Saturday, May 12, 1744, I came to a settlement of Irish and Dutch people about twelve miles above the Forks of the Delaware." This, of course, means the two present Mt. Bethels, and probably includes Richmond, twelve miles from Easton, and Williamsburg, five miles farther north; for Sherman Day, in his "Historical Collections of Pennsylvania, 1843," speaks of Richmond as "an ancient village, inhabited chiefly by Germans;" and then, quoting Brainerd's Journal incorrectly, Day says: "Brainerd went twelve miles farther, to Sakhauwotung," which would place this Indian village so close to Easton as to destroy every tradition on the subject; whereas, what Brainerd did write is simply that quoted above. Whether he found the Irish people at Williamsburg or at Martin's Creek is not so well established, as there are good reasons for each location. Captain F. Ellis, in his "History of Northampton County in 1877," a work of much ability, and yet unfortunately marred by many serious blunders, says that a company of Ulster Scots, under the leadership of Alexander Hunter, in 1730, came to Northampton County and located in three distinct spots, two of which were Martin's Creek and Williamsburg, but all were known only as Hunter's Settlement in the Forks.

Brainerd does not say that he stopped here, however, but implies the contrary in writing under date of "Lord's Day, May 13," that he rose early after having been fatigued and wet in his long journey; "the children were all at play; there appeared to be no Sabbath." A stranger, and not knowing where to go, disappointed as to getting an interpreter, "he rode three or four miles to the Irish people," and preached first to them and then to the Indians. Some have thought this to refer to the well-known "Irish settlement" near Bath, where indeed Brainerd did preach often afterward, the first time being July 23d, of that year. But there were no Indian villages within three or four miles of Bath, in any direction. And as the Indians always located their villages where there was either rich land or good fishing, it cannot for a moment be supposed that Sakhauwotung was situated anywhere near the centre of our present county, as the "Drylands" were then considered no better than barrens and absolutely worthless for agriculture. Months later, in his report to the society in Scotland that had employed him, he says expressly that "on May 13 he arrived at Sakhauwotung, within the Forks of the Delaware."

The conclusion, then, is that this place, which in the tongue of the Delawares meant "the mouth of a creek where some one resides," was on the west bank of the Delaware, not more than four miles above or below Belvidere; if below, then three or four miles brings one to Martin's Creek; and if above, then the same distance brings one to Williamsburg. The latter is claimed by Luke W. Brodhead in his valuable work on the "Delaware Water Gap; its Legends and History," 1870. He says that Sakhauwotung is now known as Allen's Ferry, opposite Delaware Station, N. J. In the elaborate "Historical Map of Pennsylvania" this question is deftly "straddled" by placing the long sentence, "Brainerd's Cabin, 1744," along the Delaware, and approximately opposite Belvidere.

On his journey to this place on May 10th, Brainerd reached the Indians who dwelt in the rich lands of the Minisinks, in the eastern part of Monroe County, and "spent some time with them," visiting their king and preaching to the people; yet as we find him at Sakhauwotung only three days later, he must have gone on horseback through the Water Gap, although there was no wagon-road there until the year 1800.

Soon after the erection of the stone church in Smithfield, in 1752, application was made to the Presbytery of New Brunswick for a supply, but it does not appear that any was granted until 1761, when the Rev. Mr. Clark was appointed for three Sabbaths. Rev. Mr. Tenant visited the church in 1762; Rev. Mr. Lyons, in 1763; Rev. John Hannah, in 1767; Rev. Mr. Schenck, in 1771; Rev. Joseph Treat, in 1778; Rev. Mr. Peppard, at different intervals between those dates; Rev. Dr. Ira Condit, in 1797; Rev. Peter Wilson, of Hackettstown, N. J., about this period, a successful laborer; Rev. David Barclay, 1805 to 1811; Rev. Dr. Joseph Campbell, in 1812.

Rev. Eleazer Wales, from Allen township, and the Rev. Mr. Rhodes labored here successfully for a period before the Revolution—the exact date not ascertained.

Rev. John Boyd was appointed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick and preached in Smithfield Church from 1813 to 1819. In 1816 he reorganized the church, and ordained John Turn and Gershom Bunnell ruling elders.

Rev. Jacob T. Field preached a short time by appointment during this period. Rev. Nathaniel Conkling, Rev. J. Force and Rev. John M. Dickey each spent a few months in this field. Revs. Hunt, Cartner and Shepherd occasionally preached here after the organization of the Newton Presbytery.

In 1832 Rev. Jacob T. Field was appointed stated supply for the congregations of Smithfield and Stroudsburg, and in 1838 was installed as pastor. In consequence of his ill health the Rev. B. J. Lane supplied the pulpit of the two churches for six months, and in 1840 Mr. Field was entirely laid aside by a paralytic stroke.

THE OLD STONE CHURCH.

Rev. John McNair then acted as supply for six months. In 1841 Rev. Baker Johnson began his pastoral labors at Smithfield and Middle Smithfield, and in 1849 the church at Stroudsburg was included in his pastoral charge. Mr. Johnson relinquished his care of the Smithfield Church in 1852, after serving for a period of twelve years and six months. In 1853 the old stone church was taken down and the present brick edifice erected on the same site. After the erection of the new church it was reorganized as a distinctly Presbyterian Church; Rev. T. B. Condit, Rev. John A. Riley and Elder Jeremiah Mackey were the committee appointed by the Presbytery of Newton for that purpose. Rev. Baker Johnson was also present. August 11, 1853, the corner-stone of the new church was laid. John D. La Bar, Findley Bush, Samuel Dietrick and Robert R. Depui were chosen ruling elders December 27, 1853, when the church was reorganized by the committee above mentioned. The church was dedicated March 9, 1854, by Rev. George C. Bush, and Rev. J. Kirby Davis was installed pastor. His time was divided between this church and the one at Middle Smithfield. He continued his services for fourteen years, until 1868. He is now living at Newark, N. J. From 1868 to 1870 the pulpit was supplied. From 1870 to 1871 Rev Arthur Folsom occupied the pulpit, followed by another interregnum of about two years, during which there were temporary supplies. From 1873 to 1875 Rev. J. L. Jenkins was stated supply, followed by Rev. John H. Brown, who labored here from January, 1880, to 1884. Rev. Fuller P. Dalrymple, the present pastor, began his labors in April, 1885. Amiel Bush and Charles Walker have since been added to the eldership.

Occupation by the Baptists.—In 1792 the Rev. Mr. Jayne, a Baptist clergyman, preached in the stone church, at which time David Jayne was chosen elder and Thomas Lander clerk.

Occupation by the Lutherans.—In 1800 the Rev. Mr. Coburn and the Rev. M. Teel, of the Lutheran Church of Plainfield, occasionally held services in the church. In 1820 Mr. Rupert, of York County, and the Rev. Jacob Tuttle both labored here at irregular periods.

The Rev. Mr. Heilig, father of the Rev. Theophilus Heilig, the present pastor of Zion's (Lutheran) Church, in Middle Smithfield, labored very acceptably in the old stone church for a number of years. He was greatly esteemed in this community, and the son worthily enjoys the same high regard entertained for the father.

Another name in connection with the old church is held in grateful remembrance, the Rev. Mr. Hoffeditz, of the German Reformed Church. He first visited this church in 1820, and occasionally preached for a period of twenty years or more, and had also a worthy successor in his son.

The parsonage to the modern church was built in 1871, and commands a beautiful view of the Delaware Water Gap and the surrounding hills and valleys. There is an old graveyard hard by the church, where the old pioneers sleep. Here, as elsewhere, many of the old graves are marked by moss-covered, native head and foot-stones, and some without date or initial.

About the year 1825 a Sunday-school was organized by John V. Bush and others. This school has been continued, with occasional interruptions, till the present. Among those who were prominent in sustaining the school in former days were Henry Eilenberger and, later, Joseph V. Wilson, son of the Rev. Peter Wilson, who organized the school and left it in a prosperous condition at his death. It is believed the present success of the school is largely due to their labors. The school now numbers one hundred pupils and is under the superintendency of the pastor.

Since the foregoing account of Smithfield Church was prepared, a volume the writer has for many years been in search of was unexpectedly found at the residence of a neighbor, being a record of the Reformed Dutch Church of Smithfield, but too late for use in this connection. It was kept in the Dutch language, and was commenced by the Rev. Casperus Fryenmuth, in May, 1741, and continued for the entire term of his pastorate in the Minisink. The last entry in the handwriting of Mr. Fryenmuth is the record of the baptism of Daniel, son of William De Voor and Catharine Schoonmaker, his wife, September 22, 1752. Benjamin Schoonmaker (Shoemaker) and Elizabeth De Pui appear as sponsors.

During the pastorate of Mr. Fryenmuth the record was neatly and accurately kept, showing good taste and scholarship as well. His successors were not so fortunate in this respect.

Following is a transcript of a part of the first page containing baptisms:

The first marriage registered is as follows:

"1. 4 July. Moses Du Puy Wed. van Antie Reel met Anna Prys: J. D: Geboren, in Lancaster County, in Pennsylvania, beyde woonach tigh in Smithsfield, in Bucks County; getosunt Jan. 18, dito by my J. Freyenmuth."

The last entry is the baptism of Catharine Maria De Witt, daughter of Jacob and Sarah De Witt, born 20th of March, 1806; baptized July 1, 1807, by the Rev. David Barclay, who was pastor from 1805 to 1811; Abram Van Campen, sponsor. Rev. Jacobus Romine made the last entry before this—January 5, 1805.

In the record of church officers, Smithfield and Walpack are kept together during the ministration of Mr. Fryenmuth. Among the early members of the consistory (Onderlinger) before 1750 are Nicholas De Pui, Lambart Brinck, Benjamin Depuy, Benjamin Schoonmaker, Derick Van Vliet and James Hyndshaw (in 1752).

Deacons for the same period,—Benjamin Schoonmaker, Daniel De Pui, Aaron De Pui, Harman Rose Kraus and Joseph Hendrekas.

The following irregular entry is made apparently by the Rev. John Boyd, who ministered in Smithfield Church from 1813 to 1819:

"January 31, 1814, the First English Presbyterian Congregation of Lower and Middle Smithfield having met at the school-house near to John Coolbaugh's, chose Gershom Bunnel and John Turn, for ruling elders; Benjamin Tock, Moses Chambers, Daniel Labar, Nicholas Depue and John Coolbaugh for trustees in said Congregation.

"Witness present: John Boyd."

Church of the Mountain.—On the 22d of January, 1854, a Presbyterian Church was organized at the Delaware Water Gap, to be called "the Church of the Mountain." The Rev. Horatio S. Howell, who had been laboring in that vicinity for six months previously as a missionary of the Philadelphia Home Missionary Society, was assisted in the services of the organization by the Rev. F. F. Ellinwood, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church at Belvidere, N. J. The following persons united in the organization: Samuel Gulick, by letter from the Presbyterian Church at Stroudsburg; Susannah Snyder, by letter from the Second Presbyterian Church, Belvidere, N. J.; Anna Maria Brodhead, by letter from the Presbyterian Church of Middle Smithfield; and on examination,—Abraham Newhart, Susannah Newhart, David Shannon, Rachel Shannon, Elizabeth Brodhead, Mary Brodhead, Elenora Snyder, Emily R. Snyder, Susan Bartron, James Dutot, Susan Van Scoter. Samuel Gulick was chosen ruling elder. The services of the organization were held in the school-house nearly opposite the church lot. The church edifice was commenced in July, 1853, and was dedicated on the 29th day of August, 1854, on which occasion Rev. H. S. Howell was assisted by Rev. F. F. Ellinwood, of Belvidere, Rev. Andrew Miller, of Stroudsburg, and Rev. W. Wood, of the Methodist Church at Centreville; Rev. F. F. Ellinwood preached the dedicatory sermon. The congregation are greatly indebted to the late Mrs. Caroline E. G. Peale, of Philadelphia, Dr. John M. Paul, of Belvidere, and Mathew Baldwin, of Philadelphia, for their liberal assistance in erecting the church, and in the deep interest manifested by them in the spiritual welfare of the community. January 6, 1871, Theodore Houser and L. W. Brodhead were elected ruling elders, and Elias Compton subsequently. Rev. Horatio S. Howell came to Water Gap in August, 1853, and organized the church, and continued as pastor until March, 1862, when he was chosen chaplain of the Ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was killed while attending to the sick and wounded at the hospital in Gettysburg, July 1, 1863. He was succeeded by Rev. E. J. Pierce, who filled the pulpit until 1870, when Rev. S. W. Knipe commenced his pastoral labors, and in January, 1884, was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Tyack.

Delaware Water Gap Methodist Church.—"Delaware Water Gap, or Dutotsburg, as it was then called, was one of the first Methodist vineyards planted north of the Blue Mountains," about 1800. The circuit reached from Easton to Stroudsburg, and at one time was equal, if not ahead, of any of the others. Among the earliest Methodists at this place were John Staples and his wife, Margaret, who made their house a home for the preachers. Staples was an Englishman, who came to this country on board the ship that brought the tea for that Boston tea party in 1773. He had an interest in the cargo until it was thrown overboard, when he became interested in America and fought for independence during the Revolution. His son, Luke Staples, and his wife also made their place a home for the preachers. Philip, Elizabeth, Millix and Eliza Dutot and John Dutot were Methodists. John Delong and wife and Hugh Pugh were good old Methodists; Samuel Pugh, son of Hugh Pugh, was a class-leader; Rev. Messrs. Bagely and Miller preached there at an early day. This place was connected with Stoddartsville and Cherry Valley. William Sayre and Elizabeth Sayre were old members, also William and Mary Long. Rev. James Neal preached here in Luke Staples' house when he was a young man. He came as a stranger, and after he was through preaching sat down and sang,—

"A stranger lonely here I roam,
From place to place I'm driven;
My friends are gone and I'm in gloom,
This world is all a dreary tomb,
I have no home but Heaven."

He was but a mere boy and a stranger, and his pathetic song brought tears to many of his hearers' eyes. Thus did these early itinerant preachers go from place to place and preach in houses, barns or the open forests, wherever they could gain a hearing. The early history of this church only exists in tradition and in the memory of its oldest members. Its records are very poorly kept. Rev. David Best, William Colbert, James Bissey (who was preaching when lightning struck the church and he was killed), Rev. George Banghard, James McFarland and James Smith also preached at the Gap. Adrian Dutot was class-leader at one time. After awhile this field was abandoned, and after remaining in that condition for a number of years, in 1867 L. D. Brown, who was stationed at Portland, came to Water Gap and preached every two weeks in the school-house. In 1869 he held a series of meetings, and there was a great revival and about seventy were converted. A class was organized, and Samuel Witter and A. B. Burrell were the first class-leaders. Then Robert Demund became a class-leader. This reorganization led to the building of the present church in 1870. It is a neat brick edifice, and will seat about three hundred persons. There are now forty-two members. There is also a Sunday-school connected with the church. Among the more active members since the reorganization were A. B. Burrell, Hiram Staples and Jacob Kennedy. A. B. Burrell wrote the life of George La Bar, the centenarian. He also at one time kept the Lenape House. At the time of the dedication of the Methodist Church, August 4, 1870, he composed the "Corner-stone Hymn,"—

"More firm than these eternal hills
Which round us rise to-day,
Thy words, oh, Lord shall stand unchanged
When mountains pass away;
And thou hast said Thou wouldst defend,
Go with thy people to the end,
* * * * * * *
While Nature speaks Thy greatness here
With voice that charms and awes;
Let man the noblest of thy works,
Praise more the Great First cause;
Redeeming Love attune our Lyre,
In unison with Heaven's choir."
* * * * * * *

After the reorganization by Rev. Lucien B. Brown, Rev. Messrs. W. J. Mill, R. C. Wood, H. F. Isett, R. C. Turner, T. T. Mutchler, H. B. Maugher, R. A. Miller, R. C. Patterson, John L. Staples, W. Vanderherchen and H. W. Millison have occupied the pulpit.

Rev. John L. Staples is descended from the Water Gap family of that name. He was born there in 1814, and was licensed to preach in 1838 by Rev. James Harmer, and ordained by Bishop Janes in 1851. During the war he was chaplain of the One Hundred and Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers at first, and afterwards he was chaplain of a regiment that was stationed in Washington, D. C. It was while here that his son, J. S. Staples, went into the army as a substitute for Abraham Lincoln, for which he received six hundred and fifty dollars, and a New York Herald reporter, handed the father fifty dollars for his consent to have his son go into the army.

THE WATER GAP HOUSE.—The Water Gap House was built in 1872 by L. W. Brodhead, the present proprietor. It is located about three hundred feet above the Delaware, on "Sunset Hill," and will accommodate two hundred and seventy-five guests. The halls are spacious and the verandas are broad and everything about the building has a neat, as well as substantial, appearance. Mr. Brodhead does not sell intoxicants, and attracts the very best class of boarders to his house, among whom are found men of distinction, wealth and influence.

The Water Gap has ever been a favorite resort for people of quiet tastes and cultivated habits from the principal Eastern cities. The hotel is beautifully located on Sunset Hill, which rises above the bold rocky bluff upon which the Kittatinny House is built, and "is a confused, disjointed, irregular mass of rock from base to apex. From this spot, so interesting in its geological structure, is a view composed of all varieties nature makes use of in forming a landscape pleasing to the eye. To the south the proportions of the Gap are well defined, and from this point Mr. Darley, the artist, delighted most to behold it. Looking to the north and east, you trace the waving outlines of the Shawnee Hills, the long stretch of the Kittatinny, and the lake-like repose of the Delaware, with the lower portion of Cherry Valley and the village in the nearer view. You will be disappointed in going to see the sun set from this hill, and will conclude there is a misapplication of the name, as the last rays of the sun are obstructed by the grove of trees to the west. But the pleasure to be enjoyed at this hour of the day, and in which the name has its significance, is to witness the shadows made from the waving outline of hills to the west as they slowly climb to the side of the mountain, rising higher and higher as the dying orb sinks to the horizon." The view altogether is one of the finest to be witnessed from any hotel in the country.

THE KITTATINNY HOUSE was commenced by Anthony Dutot in 1829 and purchased by Samuel Snyder in 1832, who took possession in 1833 and enlarged and completed the building commenced by Mr. Dutot. The house then accommodated twenty-five persons and was filled the first season, even before it was fairly finished. Among the first guests were Mrs. Swift and Miss Coffman (of Easton), Caleb Cope and family and General Cadwallader and family (of Philadelphia). William A. Brodhead rented the Kittatinny House and moved there in 1841. In 1851 he purchased the house and increased its capacity to accommodate sixty persons. In 1853 its capacity was increased to seventy-five persons, and in 1862 to one hundred and sixty; and again, in 1866, to two hundred. The house was rebuilt by Edward L. and John D. Brodhead, the present owners, in 1884, and has now a capacity of about two hundred and seventy-five persons.

The Kittatinny House is finely located on a bold bluff on the Pennsylvania side, one hundred and eighty feet above the Delaware. The spot commands a fine view of the windings of the river, and the surrounding mountains and hills, but the view of the Gap itself is incomplete, being obstructed at this point by "Blockhead" Mountain, which, however, is overlooked by the views from other points higher up the mountain-side. The situation is well chosen and has the benefit of every breeze. Among the many distinguished guests of this house the following might be mentioned: George W. Childs and family, Morton McMichael and family, Louis A. Godey and family, ex-Governor Joel Parker and family, (of Trenton), the Cadwalladers, Rawles, General Patterson, General McClellan, General Heintzelman, the Stevenson family and Judges James M. Porter and Andrew H. Reeder, (afterwards Governor of Kansas), and of people now living, some of the most prominent financiers and politicians in the country. The Water Gap has been a place of resort for old Quaker families even in the time when they came from Philadelphia in the old-fashioned stage-coach.

THE GLENWOOD HOUSE was built by Rev. Horatio S. Howell, for a boys' boarding-school, in 1854–55. William McMichael and Clayton McMichael, sons of the late Hon. Morton McMichael, of Philadelphia, received their academic course at this school. The former is a prominent lawyer in New York. The latter was United States marshal during the Presidency of Mr Arthur, and is now editor of the North American, the oldest daily paper in Philadelphia. Judge John N. Stewart, of Trenton, N. J., was also one of his pupils. The Hon. John B. Storm, the present Representative in Congress from this district, was, for a time, a pupil of the Rev. Mr. Howell. In March, 1862, the Rev. Mr. Howell was chosen chaplain of the Ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers by Colonel Lyle, and was killed by a rebel soldier whilst attending to the sick and wounded at the hospital in Gettysburg, July 1, 1863. Samuel Alsop took possession of the Glenwood House soon after Mr. Howell left, in 1862. He continued it a few years as a boys' boarding-school, and afterwards as a summer boarding-house. Mr. Alsop purchased the property and enlarged the building. It was afterwards sold to Mr. Amos La Bar, the present owner. Mr. Alsop gave up the place in 1881 and removed to Philadelphia. He was a fine scholar and a noble-hearted man, and greatly esteemed in this community.

River View House.—John I. Blair, of Blairstown, N. J., built the Lenape House (now called River View House) for A. B. Burrell, who ran it for a few years, then Frank Hauser had the house for about four years. Lizzie T. Le Barre bought the property of Mr. Blair in 1879, and has since made improvements so that the house will accommodate about fifty guests. River View House is beautifully located on a commanding rise of ground above the depot. The grounds are adorned with juniper trees and the view of the Delaware River from the house is very pleasing. Mr. A. B. Burrell, above-mentioned, was the author of "Reminiscences of George La Bar, the Centenarian of Monroe County." He was a worthy man and an active Christian.

The Delaware House is near the depot and will accommodate about forty persons. It was started in 1869 by B. F. Skiurm, the present proprietor.

The Central House is located near the Methodist Church. It is new and neat and was opened in 1885 by Samuel D. Overfield. It will accommodate about fifty persons.

Theodore Hauser started the Mountain House in 1870. It has since been enlarged and will accommodate about eighty persons. It is now run by Mrs. Hauser & Son.

Besides these regular boarding-houses, there are a number of neat cottages in the village where boarders are taken during the summer season. Among these are B. F. Brodhead's cottage, capacity thirty-five; Mrs. William Snyder's cottage, capacity twenty; Simon Hauser's cottage, capacity twenty; Mrs. James Fenner, capacity twenty.

The River Farm House is one-half mile or more out of town, and is a quiet, pleasant place. It will accommodate about forty persons. Ewen T. Crosdale is the proprietor.

David Dills bought two hundred and nineteen acres of land in Smithfield township, where the Wesley Water Cure is located, in 1790. In the year 1794 he sold it to Colonel François Vannier for seven hundred pounds current money of Pennsylvania. The tract is called Plainfield in the old parchment deed, and it adjoins lands of Daniel Brodhead, Wm. Smith and Stephen Huffe, with the Analoming Creek on the south. Colonel Vannier and wife lived in San Domingo, about 1790, when the island was under French dominion, but when the negroes rose in rebellion and drove the French out of the island, gathered up what valuables they could and fled on board a ship, which brought them to Philadelphia, when the colonel shortly after purchased the place above mentioned and came to Smithfield to live. His twin brother, who was a major in the French service, came with him. They kept slaves and were aristocratic in their feelings, standing aloof from their neighbors, and having but very little association with the people by whom they were surrounded.

Joseph Hauser, a constable, who became well acquainted with Colonel Vannier, married his daughter Susette, and inherited all of the colonel's property.

When Vannier died he gave the property to his wife with the understanding that she should transmit it to Susette, their common heir, a provision which she faithfully carried out. Joseph Hauser built the stone house on the corner, on the south side of the road. He and his wife lived there some twenty-five years, during which time they had one child, which died. His wife dying, Hauser married a widow, Margaret Eagles, with whom he lived until his demise. She had two daughters when she married him, and after his death she deeded the property to them, reserving an annuity for herself. This second wife, though in no way related to the Vanniers, excepting through this chain of marriages, received money from San Domingo, through the French government, for a number of years. Her daughters were Sarah, the wife of Theodore P. Taylor, and Emily C., the wife of Jacob L. Wyckoff.

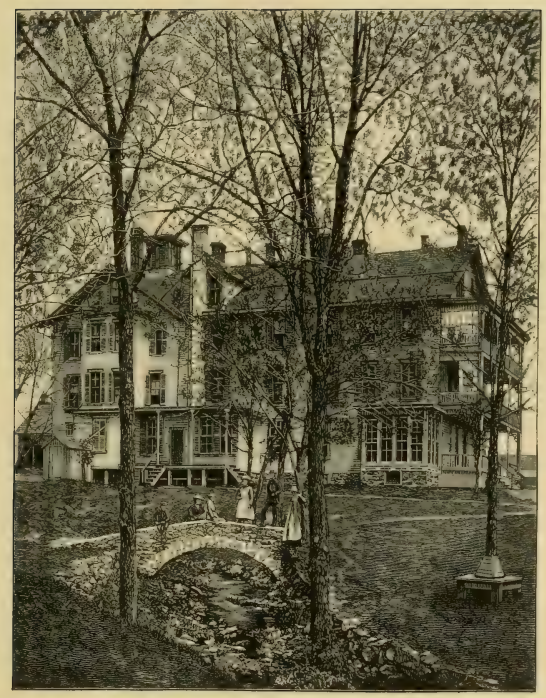
THE WESLEY WATER CURE.—In the year 1871 Dr. F. Wilson Hurd, who had been searching through the Eastern, Middle and Southern States for a good location for a Health Institution selected the site of the Wesley Water Cure as the most desirable that he had seen east of the Mississippi, on account of its combining the advantage of a high altitude, and therefore of pure, dry, bracing air, entirely free from miasma, with excellent water, healthful climatic influences in general, easy accessibility from the great centres of population, and last, but not least, beautiful scenery.

Here he established, within a few minutes' drive from Stroudsburg and the famous Delaware Water Gap, the sanitarium, which we propose briefly to describe. The building, which fronts towards the south, is located on a gentle slope, a forest-covered hill rising north of it, and protecting it from the cold northwesterly winds, while the sun shines full upon it from its rising to its setting, its rays, however, tempered agreeably in summer by the foliage of the surrounding trees.

Knowing the great power there is in the direct and indirect rays of the sun in overcoming unhealthy conditions, Dr. Hurd sought to locate the Wesley Water Cure where the clearest and strongest sunlight could be had, in conjunction with as many other natural advantages as could be found combined in one place. The cure building is a three-story wooden structure, planned and built by Dr. Hurd in 1873. It is arranged with special reference to the particular work for which it is designed.



Every room and hall is scientifically ventilated through flues from the base, communicating with a hot-air shaft. The windows extend nearly to the ceiling, for the purpose of securing in abundance that most valuable of curative influence—solar light.

The grounds are tastefully laid out and adorned with sufficient shade trees. There is also a grove of chestnut, oak, hickory, maple, elm, ash, butter-nut, black walnut, cherry and other forest-trees, covering the grove that lies adjacent to the Cure. There is a fine spring of water that rises in the hill and flows down through the grounds in a little rivulet that unites with the Analomink. The Water Cure is supplied with abundance of cool, soft, pure water from this never-failing source.

The Wesley Water Cure is named in honor of John Wesley, because he was a consistent and vigorous advocate of a pure, simple, disciplinary life and governed by the same principles which regulate the treatment of this cure.

The plan of treatment is in strict accordance with the laws of nature, recognizing vitality or the life principle as the power that performs the healing, and that disease is remedial effort—not an enemy, but a friend. Among the influences that are necessary to health are pure air, sunlight, proper food, judicious exercise, appropriate rest, water, social and religious influences, faith and a positive will. This Cure is arranged to combine all these health conditions, as nearly as possible, having the end in view,—simply the equalization of the circulation of blood and nerve force, the purification of the blood and tissues, and nutrition —resting assured that as we attain these, disease will disappear.

Medicines are not used. The bath is used and applied in various ways to meet the needs of different cases, as full bath, spray, foot-bath, flowing, douche, sitz-bath, dripping sheet, fomentation, pack, vapor or Russian bath, spinal-bath, sponge-bath, oil-bath, hand-bath, etc., to suit the special condition, Swedish movement, massage and rubbing, and from cool to hot to suit the needs of the patient. The Cure is con-

In the use of water is found the only natural freighting medium by which the particles of refuse and waste are conveyed to and from the various tissues of the body to replace that which is worn out, and convey away the impurities that are found therein. The solvent power of water is all sufficient, and far superior to any medicines, in dissolving the impurities and morbid humors of the body, and, if properly used, will accomplish what medicines can never do in cleansing a body and restoring it to health. Medicines do not cure; they simply divert the action of disease, which is remedial effort, and force nature into an accommodation to the presence of unhealthy particles of matter in the system, not cleansing them out and expelling them from the system, but leaving them in the tissues throughout the body, and thus is established a chronic condition or disease in place of an acute disease or one of a higher or more vital type. The greater proportion of the cases treated here are of the chronic type, and the effect of the natural life and treatment is to produce a change in the type of vitality and to develop the former or acute manifestation of disease, which, after running the natural course, disappears, leaving the body free and in a healthy state. The institution thus is a school as well as a remedial institute, inasmuch as each patient, while being treated and getting well, is inducted into the principles upon which health is based, and becomes thereby practically his own doctor ever after in all ordinary derangements of the organism. The system here practiced is largely prophylactic, and therefore the chief part of the prevailing diseases are avoided by persons so living, they not being susceptible to take on disease. A particular system of food and preparation is practiced, which excludes all high seasoning and the use of lard and grease shortenings. A very moderate use of salt, butter and sugar, and also meats and little or no white or bolted flour, tea and coffee. Unleavened bread is used in preference to leavened. Exact regularity in meals is enjoined and no eating between meals.

It may be said that the laws of growth and of the maintenance of health are the laws regulating cure from disease, and that all changes, whether in health or disease, should be made gradually or closely simulating the process of growth.

The institution will accommodate fifty patients. The whole Cure is under the medical care of Dr. F. Wilson Hurd, a man of large experience in the care of the sick in similar institutions. The domestic arrangements are under the care of his wife. Health lectures are occasionally given, in which are set forth the theory and practice of natural cure and how to live so as to avoid sickness and preserve health.

The outlook southward from the piazza is very fine, Analomink River Gap being in full view with the Delaware Water Gap and Kittatiny Mountains in the distance, making it a desirable place for recreation or rest.

Dr. F. Wilson Hurd, the founder of the Wesley Water Cure, and one of the leading exponents in this country of the system of health-making which is practiced there, was born in the town of Trumbull, Fairfield County, Conn., March 23, 1830, and was a son of Elliot and Fanny (Burton) Hurd. His paternal grandfather was Frederick, and his great-grandfather John Hurd, of a family very long settled and well-known in Connecticut. His mother was a daughter of Captain Nathaniel Burton, a West India trader, and on the female side was a descendant of the Booth family, which was among those transplanted from Old to New England in very early colonial times. Dr. Hurd is a cousin of Rev. Dr. Nathaniel J. Burton, of Hartford.

In 1833, when the subject of our sketch was a mere babe, his parents removed to Nieshewaka, St. Joseph County, Indiana, and there they both died within three weeks and a day of each other, six years later, when F. Wilson, the third of four children, was only in his ninth year. After a short period his grandfather, Frederick Hurd, sent for the children and gave them a home with him upon his farm, known as "Shagenawamps," in Trumbull, Conn., near Burr's Mill, on the Housatonic Railroad. There the early boyhood of our subject was spent in the hard work of New England farming, varied by attending the common district schools in winter, and there he grew physically and mentally, and picked up a little of education in things practical and things theoretical, principally the former. When sixteen years of age he went to Newark, N. J., and learned the hatter trade, but he broke down in health and had to return to Connecticut. There he followed his trade for a time and then went into a machine-shop and learned to make surgical instruments. All of the time he was supporting himself, but making little headway beyond that, for he had poor health, and finally, to improve that, he went to sea. He was principally engaged in coasting, but made a voyage around Cape Horn to San Francisco, and returned by way of Callao and the Chinchi Islands. He followed sea-faring for nine years, during the latter part of the period serving as an engineer on a steamer.

In 1857 he visited, for the benefit of his health, the old Glen Haven Water Cure at the head of Skaneateles Lake, New York, and there was opened to him the avenue of life and usefulness which he has since followed. He became interested in this system of cure there in vogue, studied it and resolved to devote his life to the practice of its principles. In 1858 he formed a partnership with two others, and with James C. Jackson as physician-in-chief, they opened what is now known as the Dansville

F. Wilson Hurd

Water Cure, in Livingston County, N. Y. For ten years Dr. Hurd (who had in the mean time acquired his title by proper process) had a daily average of one hundred patients in his care, and had charge of all the mechanical appliances in this large institution. At the expiration of that ten years, in 1868, he sold out, and in 1871 came to Monroe County, having, as already related, made choice of his present location as containing all of the best advantages for a cure.

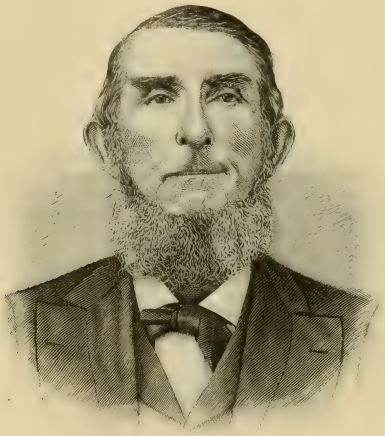
Dr. Hurd, in 1860, graduated from the hydropathic school known as the Hygieo-Therapeutic College of New York City, a school of medicine then working under a charter from the Legislature of that State, and he also attended lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Bellevue Medical College, also of New York.

The doctor was married on the 13th of August, 1866, to Hannah A., daughter of the Hon. Emerson Johnson, of Sturbridge, Mass. They have two children, – Fanny Burton and Anna Johnson.



Delaware Water Gap Pulp and Paper-Mills.—James Bell settled where the wood-pulp mill now is in 1810. He built a saw-mill and grist-mill on the Analomink, or Brodhead Creek. In 1880 his grandsons—Thomas, Edward and Frank—built a wood-pulp mill, which they ran a short time, when a stock company was organized under the name of Delaware Water Gap Pulp and Paper Company's Mills, with a capital stock of two hundred thousand dollars—J. E. Roberts, president; E. N. Cohn, secretary and treasurer; Frank J. Roberts, general manager. The mills employ about forty men and boys and five girls. The capacity of the mill is about five tons of paper per day. A solid cord of wood will produce nine hundred pounds of paper. Pine, poplar, basswood and other soft woods are used in making the pulp. The process of making wood-pulp paper is as follows: 1st. The wood is cut and cleaned of bark. 2d. A revolving-wheel, with knives attached, called a clipper, is used for cutting it into chips about one-fourth of an inch to one inch long. 3d. It then goes into a digester, which in this case is a steel boiler, six feet in diameter by twenty feet long, walled in with brick. A liquor is run into this digester along with the chips, the principal properties of which are lime, soda ash, vitriol, etc., when it is heated by direct heat under the digester to ninety degrees, and from that to one hundred and fifteen degrees. This cooks the wood. Some digesters are heated by steam pressure alone. 4th. It is then blown out of the digester by steam pressure into tanks, having been reduced to pulp by the digester. It is here thoroughly washed by weak liquor, which is run into the strong liquor tank until it is reduced to four degrees on the liquor tester, after which it is run into the weak liquor tank until it tests nothing. After it is thus reduced the liquor is drawn off and the pulp is run into the stuff-box, from whence it is pumped in the wet-machine and run through brass-screws and over rollers into sheets about one-eighth of an inch thick. This renders it convenient to handle. It is now reduced to pulp again by the beater, and passes through the Jordan engine, during which process it is colored as desired. It now goes through the bleacher or washing process in another tank, into which it had been pumped. From here it is pumped into the Fourdrinier machine (so named for the inventor) in the form of a liquor, onto brass screens. This machine is twenty-five or thirty feet long, and consists of ten heated cylinders about three feet in diameter, and twenty-one smaller cylinders about five inches in diameter. It passes through this machine in one continuous sheet about five feet wide, and into the calender which consists of nine bright, steel cylinders, one on top of the other. If the paper passes through two of the calenders it is said to be double calendered. From these calenders it passes on to slat rollers, and thence through the cutter, whence it is counted into quires and reams and packed for shipping.

Thomas Brodhead, a prominent resident of the Delaware Water Gap, was born at Slate ford, near that place, January 26, 1816. He is a lineal descendant, in the fifth generation, of Captain Daniel Brodhead, the ancestor of that family in America, who came to this country in 1664 with the expedition under Colonel Nicolls, which captured New Netherland from the Dutch and who, on September 14, 1665, was commissioned "chief officer of the militia in the Esopus," in Ulster County, N. Y., where he died July 14, 1667. The intervening ancestry of the Brodhead family will be found fully presented elsewhere in this volume. The immediate parents of our subject were Luke and Elizabeth (Wills) Brodhead, the former of whom died in Smithfield, March 21, 1845. He was a man of many excellencies of character, identified with the slate, hotel and farming interests of Smithfield, and an active, influential and useful citizen in his day and generation.

During the earlier years of his life Thomas Brodhead assisted his father in his various business enterprises, and acquired an ordinary common-school education. On November 10, 1846, he married Hannah M., daughter of George V. and Maria Bush, of Shawnee, the latter of whom is still living in her ninetieth year, and soon after commenced farming in Smithfield, where Samuel Gulick now lives. After nine years of agricultural life at that point he removed to the Delaware Water Gap and purchased a hotel property at that place, which he replaced in 1856 with the Brainerd House. Here he entertained the public for many years, chiefly the overflow of boarders from his brother's house, the Kittatinny, and during the same period continued to engage in farming and lumbering. He partially cleared off two wood tracts comprising about one hundred and seventy acres, near the Gap, and after disposing of the timber, devoted them to agricultural uses, and cleared off fifteen other tracts.

For many years he has carried on an extensive livery business at the gap, and is now operating a saw-mill at the same point. He has erected and owned several of the handsome cottages in the village and has done much in developing the business interests of the place, and in adding to its material prosperity. He is a close adherent to Democratic principles in politics, but has never been an aspirant for public office. He is a liberal contributor to the church and other worthy institutions of his locality, and is held in general respect and esteem. His children are Eugene, residing at Delaware Water Gap; Mary Alice, wife of George W. Supplee, of Philadelphia; Lizzie, wife of John D. Brodhead, of the Kittatinny House; Horatio and George B., also living at the Gap; and Bertha and Thomas C., living at home.

CHAPTER IX.

MIDDLE SMITHFIELD TOWNSHIP.

General Description.—This township is bounded on the north by Price township and Pike County, east by Pike County and the Delaware River, south and southwest by the Delaware and Smithfield township, and west by Price township. It is separated by the above river from the State of New Jersey. The surface of the township is generally hilly and broken. The soil in its southern portion is a rich loam, with comparatively little stone and very productive. Just north, in the vicinity of the Coolbaugh settlement, is a limestone ridge, and in its neighboring locality a slate deposit, though not sufficiently rich to be worked. A strata of red shale, extending from Pike County, also crops out in this vicinity. The soil in the northern portion is stony, and not adapted to cultivation. It is a fine timber-land, and has thus been made available to settlers. Beech, chestnut, maple and oak, with some hemlock and pine, grow here, the most luxuriant growth being that of the oak, which has been much in demand for tanning purposes. In early years the timber was cut and rafted down the Delaware, but modern railroad enterprise has superseded this primitive method of transportation. There was formerly considerable low-lands, which, by draining and reclaiming, has been made very productive. The staple grains and grass grow in abundance, as also the principal fruits found elsewhere in the State.

In 1844 more than ten thousand acres of unseated lands were offered for sale by the treasurer of the county to pay arrears of taxes and cost of sale. The populous portion of the township is chiefly confined to the southern section. Although extended in its area, Middle Smithfield contained, in 1830, a population of but one thousand, which was increased in 1840 to eleven hundred and forty-four. The real and personal property in 1844 amounted to $163,159. Its present population is thirteen hundred and thirty-nine.

Water-Courses.—The township abounds in streams, of greater or less importance. The Big Bushkill rises in the vicinity of High Knob, in Pike County, flows southeasterly through a portion of Greene township, in Pike County, into Barrett township, where it forms a junction with the east branch of the Bushkill, and continues its course southeast through Barrett, Price and Porter townships (the latter in Pike County) into Middle Smithfield. It continues a southeasterly course through this township, and pours its waters into the Delaware at Bushkill.

Marshall Creek, named after the noted pedestrian of the Indian Walk, Edward Marshall, rises in the northwest part of the township, flows southerly, and running through Smithfield, empties into Brodhead Creek. Pond Creek, which is an outlet of Coolbaugh Pond, flows westerly in a parallel line with the stage road and forms a junction with Marshall Creek, at Marshall Creek Post-Office. Willow Creek rises north of Echo Lake and, flowing easterly, joins the Big Bushkill at Shoemaker Post-Office. Long Shore Creek rises in the eastern part of the township and flows southwest into Pond Creek, on land of Adam Overfield. Shawnee Creek rises on the northerly side of Flat Brook Ridge and, flowing south to the village of Shawnee, empties into the Delaware. Seeley Lake, more recently christened Echo Lake, is located within two miles of the eastern boundary of the township, and about one-fourth of a mile north of the stage road. It covers an area of twenty acres, is at the centre at least forty feet in depth, and is fed by imperceptible springs along the eastern bottom. Its waters are remarkably clear.

Coolbaugh Lake, originally Jayne Lake, lies about two hundred rods west of Echo Lake, and is fed by springs along its banks. Both these lakes abound in pickerel, perch and bass, promoted by the enterprise of the Coolbaugh family, who brought them at some cost from streams and lakes in New Jersey.

Middle Smithfield and the adjoining region was the scene of many depredations committed by the Indians, from 1755 to 1764, which are treated of in Chapter IV. of this work.

Early Settlements.—It is not possible to determine with certainty who was the first settler in Middle Smithfield, though among the earliest were William and Isaac Jayne, two brothers, who made the township their residence after having taken up several large tracts. William Jayne had two sons, Daniel and Peter, and one daughter, Mrs. George La Bar. The sons both settled in the township, Peter having married Mary Bush and had children,—Isaac, Ann, Maria, Lorinda, Henry, Daniel, Milton, Susan and Caroline. All of these are either deceased or have removed from the township. Daniel Jayne had one son Julius and two daughters, one of whom, Mrs. Daniel Bush, resides at Marshall Creek.

John Dewitt came from Esopus to the township and purchased five hundred acres of uncleared land formerly owned by a man named Humphrey. He was by trade a blacksmith, and opened a shop on the land, burning his coal for the purpose near by. He had four sons—John, Levi, Jacob and Cornelius—and daughters Sarah and Elsie, the last-named son having died in early manhood. Jacob remained in the township and settled on his patrimony, the property being now owned by his grandson, Henry Dewitt. John Dewitt married Betsey Johnson, whose children were John, Samuel, Jacob, Joshua, Maria, Elsie and Catherine. John settled on the homestead and married Sarah Miller, whose two sons, Samuel and Henry, are resident farmers in Middle Smithfield.

Henry Shoemaker owned the property now occupied by Frank H. Smith. He sold to George Michaels and removed to Warren County, N. J. The Coolbaugh family were among the earliest settlers of the township. They were of German origin and the name is said to be identical with Coolbrook. The original ancestor in the country was William Coolbaugh, a sea-captain, who married Sarah Johnson, and first located in Hunterdon County, New Jersey. Subsequently he removed to Monroe County, Pa., following the tide of emigration which worked its way through Bucks and Northampton Counties to the valley of the Minisink, where it was met by and merged with the tide of settlement which had left the old pioneer location of Esopus, in Ulster County, New York, and passing through the Mamakating Valley, established itself in the perilous and wild region of the Minisink. William Coolbaugh had ten children, namely: Moses, born in Monroe County, Pa., died and was buried at Wysox, Bradford County, Pa., February 22, 1814, aged sixty-two years. Cornelius, who married Sarah Everett, of New Hope, Bucks County, Pa., and is buried at Smithfield. John, born September 14, 1760, died September 25, 1842, aged eighty-two years. Married by Rev. Elias Van Benschoten, September 14, 1788, to Susannah, daughter of John Van Campen. She was born at Shawnee, October 23, 1758, died January 31, 1829, aged seventy years. Her father, John, was a son of Col. Abraham Van Campen, of Pahaquarry, N. J., whose history is given in the "History of Warren and Sussex Counties, N. J." John Van Campen married Sarah De Pui, and here was a mixture of the Holland and Huguenot blood. They had three children besides Susannah, viz.: Abraham, born September 8, 1769, died November 28, 1806, aged thirty-seven years; Mary, wife of George Bush; and Blandina, wife of Henry Shoemaker, of Pahaquarry. William, born at Smithfield, Bucks County, settled at Wysox, Pa., died in Yates County, N. Y., his wife being Susannah Shoemaker. Peter settled at Wysox, thence moved to Luzerne County, Pa., and died there. Hannah, who married a Mr. Tanner, had two children, Mark and Jane. Mark lived in Bucks County and died about 1879. Jane died a short time before. Mr. Tanner died and Hannah married Silas Barton and had four children,—Britta, George and Benjamin (twins), and William. Britta died in Monmouth Co., N. J., in 1873. George lived in Charleston, South Carolina, and was killed on a steamboat. Benjamin lived in Philadelphia and died 1874. Hannah died and was buried at New Britain, Bucks County, Pa., 1804. Benjamin, born at Smithfield, settled at Wysox, died and was buried there February 13, 1815, aged forty-eight years, his wife being Jerusha Runyan. Sarah married Aaron Morris and lived in Philadelphia; had four children,—John, Eliza, Ann and Hiram. She died in 1847, and was buried in Monument Cemetery, Philadelphia. Rachel married Christopher Cowell of Wysox, and lived and died there. And Nancy who married a Barton, of Monmouth County, N. J.

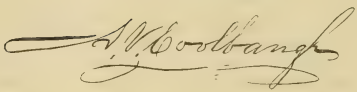
John Coolbaugh was the grandfather of the subject of this sketch. He performed active service in the Revolutionary War, and was present at the battle of Monmouth, New Jersey. After his marriage to Susannah Van Campen he purchased a tract of land lying principally in what is now Middle Smithfield township, Monroe County. His first residence was a log house, which stood where George Bush's barn afterwards stood.



In 1792 or 1793 he built the house now occupied by his grandson, Moses Frank Coolbaugh, which is the old homestead property of the Coolbaugh family. He was one of the most prominent and influential of the early settlers, and at an early period was an associate judge of Wayne County, which then included Pike and a portion of Monroe Counties. In going to and returning from court, at the old county-seat of Bethany, he rode on horseback, and frequently rode for fifty miles without seeing a house. His landed property stretched for several miles along the old stage-road, and at his death, in 1842, he left his children good farms around him, and passed away as the patriarchs of old, surrounded by a large family and in the possession of a large estate, which he had accumulated throughout a long, active and busy life. He formerly owned the land upon which the present village of Bushkill now stands. He was a man of good judgment and superior executive ability, kind and considerate to his neighbors, whom he often assisted in their troubles; of pious habits and inclinations, and closely identified with the material development of his section. He and his sons were the virtual founders of the Presbyterian Church of Middle Smithfield, and the early meetings were held at his house. His door was always open to the stranger, and his hospitable home became a sort of public-house, at which all worthy people might stop without money and without price. His children were Abraham V., Sarah, Hannah, John V., Susan and Moses W. Coolbaugh. Of these, Abraham V., born February 16, 1793, married, January 2, 1816, Margaret (born December 5, 1796), daughter of Andrew W. Dingman (who is still living, the last of her generation), operated a grist-mill, engaged in farming and had one daughter, Susannah Van Campen, who became the wife, January 25, 1844, of Rev. Andrew Tully, a Presbyterian clergyman; Sarah, married William Overfield, of Middle Smithfield, and left a large number of descendants; Hannah, married Solomon Westbrook, and had six children, (including John C., prothonotary of Pike County; Margaret, who married John B. Stoll, of Sussex County, N. J.; Hiram; Lafayette, several times a member of the State Legislature; Moses C., of Blooming Grove; and Susan, who married William H. Bell, of Sussex County, N. J.); John V. is the father of our subject; Susan became the wife of William Brodhead, of Pike County, and had Franklin, Sarah (who married Peter De Witt, of Somerville, N. J.) John (a civil engineer in Kentucky) and Mary (who died in Milford); and Moses W., married Mary, daughter of John Nyce, of Pike County, and had a large family, of whom William Finley subsequently became a leading banker in Chicago.

John V. Coolbaugh, the father of Abram V., was born, in 1796, on the old homestead. He inherited many of the characteristics of his father; was one of the first and for many years an elder in the Presbyterian Church at Middle Smithfield, and one of the successful and prosperous farmers of his township. He erected a homestead property of his own, where his son, Andrew J. Coolbaugh, now lives, near the old family mansion, and his house was always open to his friends and acquaintances. He avoided public office and devoted his chief energies to the promotion of the welfare of the church and congregation of which he was a member. He died in July, 1874. He married Mary, only daughter of Andrew Eylenberger, of Middle Smithfield township, and had children—Elizabeth, wife of Charles R. Peters, of Bushkill; Andrew J., who occupies the home farm, now known as "Willow Grove;" Abram V.; Sarah, who married Darwin E. Martin, of Bradford County; Susan, who became the wife of Daniel Peters, of Middletown, Pa.; Van Campen, who resides at Middletown; Cornelia B., residing on the home farm with her brother; Margaret D., wife of Luke W. Brodhead, proprietor of the Delaware Water Gap House; Moses, residing at Pittston, Pa.; Emma, wife of Rev. Charles E. Van Allen, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Middle Smithfield; and James C., who died in August, 1885.

Abram V. Coolbaugh was born on the original family homestead October 8, 1822. He passed his boyhood on his father's farm, attending the neighborhood schools in the primitive log school-houses of the day, and subsequently engaged in teaching for a few years himself. After reaching manhood he remained with his father until 1856, and in December of that year married Jane W. Freese, step-daughter of John H. Wallace, of Milford, and established himself upon a farm of his father's, near the Presbyterian Church, and now occupied by Rev. Mr. Van Allen. There he resided for eighteen years, engaged in farming, lumbering and surveying, which latter vocation he has steadily followed since 1846. Since that period he has surveyed extensively in Pike, Monroe, Wayne and Bucks Counties, in Pennsylvania, and Warren County, New Jersey, and at one time owned over four thousand acres in Monroe and Pike Counties. His present landed possessions cover some three thousand acres. He owns and operates a saw-mill on the Big Bushkill, in Pike County, and farms in Porter township, that county, and Middle Smithfield, Price and Barrett townships, Monroe County. In April, 1876, he moved to Stroudsburg, where he has since resided. He has erected a great many saw-mills, school-houses and private residences, and done much toward the material development of the county. He has never aspired to public office, but has always been a regular attendant of the Presbyterian Church, and a liberal supporter of that and other worthy institutions. He is a man of character and has never used tobacco or liquor in his life, nor taken a dose of medicine. He has enjoyed the delights of hunting since boyhood, and has brought down many a fat buck or doe with his unerring aim. In this connection it may be mentioned that he has become a successful taxidermist, having acquired the art for the purpose of preserving some of the choice specimens he has secured. His children are three in number, namely: Lizzie, residing at home; William C., professor in the commercial department of Pennington Seminary, New Jersey; and Annie Coolbaugh, at present attending Claverack College, Columbia County, New York. A son, John C., was instantly killed, August 8, 1883, by a gun-shot while out hunting with a companion in Ohio, and is buried in the family plot in Stroudsburg Cemetery.

John Turn emigrated to this country with his parents, and about 1790 was bound out to George Bush, of Shawnee, to learn the trade of a carpenter and cabinet-maker, and was the first undertaker in the township. At a late date he purchased eighty acres of land in the township, to which he added from time to time until he possessed one hundred and seventy acres, now the property of his son John. He was a hard-working, industrious man, of a peculiarly reticent and taciturn nature, indifferent to the holding of public office, but ever ready to defend himself against insult and oppression. He was one of the first two elders of the Middle Smithfield Presbyterian Church, of which he was one of the founders, and with which he was closely identified until his death. He married Julia Ann, daughter of Henry Shoemaker, of Warren County, N. J., and had children,—Elizabeth, who became the wife of Samuel Miller, of Wyoming County, Pa.; Henry S. (deceased); John, living on the home farm; Samuel S., of Naples, N. Y.; and Blandina, who married Emanuel Miller, of Smithfield, and is dead.

John Turn, the younger, was born on the farm where he now resides, in Middle Smithfield township, July 23, 1821. He was reared upon his father's homestead farm in Middle Smithfield, and enjoyed the benefits of only a common-school education. From the age of twenty to that of twenty-three he assisted in running a raft on the Delaware River to Philadelphia, and then rented the home farm for ten years and entered upon the life of a farmer. He subsequently became the owner of the farm, and has continued to reside thereon since 1844. He has confined himself strictly to legitimate farming, avoiding speculative enterprises of all kinds, and what he has acquired of this world's goods has been from the production and sale of the fruits of the soil. He has added by purchase to the original tract, and now owns about two hundred and twenty-eight acres of good land. His residence was built by his father in 1832, and the barn in 1833, and together with the other improvements of the farm, has been kept in good repair by him. No man in the township enjoys a higher reputation for uprightness of character and sterling integrity than Mr. Turn. He has always avoided political preferment, though a consistent supporter of Democratic principles. He has been a member of the Presbyterian Church of Middle Smithfield since early manhood, and is at present an elder and liberal supporter of that church. He married Ency, daughter of Melchior Depue, and has nine children, namely—Henry, who resides in Wyoming County, Pa.; Sarah, wife of Edward Bush, of Marshall Creek; M. Depue, residing in Middle Smithfield; Samuel, William D., George B., Frank, Elizabeth and Charles R. Turn.

Melchior Depue came from Warren County, N. J., and located on the farm now owned by Joseph Overfield. He married Eliza Gonsaules, of the same township, and had children —Ency (Mrs. John Turn), Sarah (Mrs. Dimmock Overfield), Samuel, Moses, Elizabeth, William, Henry and Philip. William Depue is a resident of Pike County. Two daughters, Mrs. Turn and Mrs. Overfield, reside in the township.

Robert Hanna settled on a farm near Seeley

Lake. His children were Isaac, Robert, Benjamin and several daughters. Robert married and had children, of whom Benjamin formerly resided in the township.

George Michaels, on his emigration from Germany, settled in Forks township, Northampton County, Pa., and later purchasing three farms in Middle Smithfield, located, with his three sons,—Peter, George and John,—on the spot now the house of George M. Michaels. John Michaels married a Miss Snable, of Northampton County and had children,—George and John and eight daughters, of whom three reside in the township,—George, Lydia (Mrs. John M. Overfield) and Kate (Mrs J. H. Eylenberger). The grandsons of Peter Michaels, now residents of Middle Smithfield, are Peter and Andrew. A son of George Michaels, named John, now in his ninety-fourth year, resides in the State of New Jersey.

Joseph Gonsaules, who was of Spanish birth, first settled at Bushkill. One of his sons, Emanuel by name, married a Miss Utt, whose children are Samuel, Margaret (Mrs. Cortright) and Emanuel. The last-named removed to the township and located on the farm now owned by his son, Emanuel H. He married Sarah, daughter of William Cortright, of the same township, his children being James, Samuel, Elizabeth, Anne, Margaret, Mary, Susan, Emanuel H., William and Sarah. Three of these—William, Emanuel H. and Susan (Mrs. Martin Overfield)—are still in Middle Smithfield.

James Place, who was formerly a resident of Esopus, N. Y., settled on a farm now owned by Martin Cortright, where his death occurred. He was united in marriage to Phebe Winans, whose children were Jacob, William, Rebecca, Rosanna, James, John, Mary, Eleanor, Isaac, Ann and George. Jacob, whose birth occurred in 1786, settled on the farm now owned by his son, Martin Place, having married Mary Overfield, whose children are Eliza, William, Sarah, Rebecca, Martin, James and Mary Ann. Mr. Place died at the early age of thirty-five years. John Place, brother of Jacob, married Martha Bunnell, and located on an adjacent farm, now owned by his son Benjamin. Martin, the son of Jacob Place, married Mary Overfield and has eight children—John M., Jacob, Morris R., Lydia, Eliza, William, Sarah and Martin, of whom John M., resides in Blairstown, N. J.

Isaac Quigley came from Trenton, N. J., to the township and purchased the farm now owned by George Walter. His children were Elijah, Isaac, Robert, Samuel and one daughter. One son, Elijah, now in his ninety-first year, resides in the township with his son-in-law, Charles Strunk. He married Mary Bunnell, whose children were four daughters,—Eleanor, Jane, Mary and Catharine,—all of whom are residents of Middle Smithfield.

Jonas Hanna purchased a farm in the northern portion of the township and married Barbara Mann. Their children were Benjamin, Hiram, Jackson, Philip, William, Charles, John, Susan, Ellen, Mary, Betsey, Sally and Susan, of whom William and John still reside in the township. John married Elizabeth Castard, and now resides with his children. William married Elizabeth Overfield and has seven children.

Paul Overfield, on his emigration from Germany, first settled in New Jersey. Prior to the Revolutionary War he removed to Middle Smithfield, and located on a farm situated upon the banks of the Delaware, now the property of Samuel Dewitt, where he died and was buried. He had children—William, Martin, Paul, Benjamin and two daughters, Mary and Sarah. Martin married Elizabeth Utt, of the same township, and had children,—William, Paul, Adam, Mary, Sarah and Samuel. Of these, Sarah (Mrs. John Mosier), now in her ninety-fifth year, resides in the township. Adam, who has passed his ninety-first year, married Mary Harman, and has children,—William, George, Martin, Moses, Frederick, Adam, Elizabeth and Rebecca, all but two of whom reside in the township. Mr. Overfield still occupies the old homestead.

Jacob Shoemaker, who came from Northampton County, married Hannah, daughter of Rudolphus Troch. His children were Jacob, Charles, James, William, Andrew, John, Emanuel, Magdalena, Sally Ann, Helen and Jacob. Mr. Shoemaker settled at Shoemaker

P. O. One son, Andrew, and two daughters—Sally Ann (Mrs. Philip Peters) and Helen (Mrs. Samuel Dewitt)—still reside in the township, the remainder of the family being either residents of other localities or deceased. Near the house of Mr. Shoemaker is the farm of George Peters, whose wife was a Miss Miller. Their children are Henry, John, Jacob, Philip, William, George Washington, Daniel and several daughters. John, Philip and George W. still reside in the township.

John Pipher was formerly a resident of Northampton County, and on his arrival in the township settled on the farm now occupied by his granddaughter, Mrs. Van Horn. His children were Samuel, Jacob, John, Sarah (Mrs. Smith), Julia (Mrs. Smith), Elizabeth (Mrs. Place) and Loretta (Mrs. Walton). Jacob married Julia Transue, whose children are Horace H., a resident of Stroudsburg; George, who resides in the township; two sons, who have removed to other localities; and two daughters.

Rodolphus Smith resided in a log house in Middle Smithfield before the French and Indian War. During that conflict his family fled to New Jersey for safety, and on their return resided in a cob log house built by him. His children were Catherine, wife of Anthony Van Etten; Maria; Jemima, who removed to the West; and James. The latter, an only son, a farmer in the township, married Lydia Bertrand, daughter of Daniel Bertrand, an early settler, and survived until her one hundredth year. Their children are Rodolphus, David, Daniel, Samuel, Simon, Benjamin, Jonas, John, William, James, Elizabeth (Mrs. Henry Van Why) and Jane (Mrs. John Stuart). All the sons with the exception of Jonas, who removed to the West, located in the vicinity of the homestead.

Dr. Thomas Grattan emigrated from Ireland in the year 1832, and settled in Middle Smithfield township, where he began the practice of his profession, that of medicine. By his marriage to a Miss Jackson were born two sons—Frank and Matthew George. Frank married a Miss Jackson and Matthew George was united to Miss Mary M. Shoemaker, to whom were born a son, William, now residing in Buffalo, N. Y., and a daughter, Hannah, wife of Peter S. Williams, of Stroudsburg, who has one child, a daughter, Lena.

John Smith, the son of Isaac Smith, and the grandson of John Smith, removed to Middle Smithfield in 1839, having purchased a farm on the banks of the Delaware. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Aaron Hankinson, also of Middle Smithfield, and formerly of New Jersey. To this union were born three children—Frank H., George H. (deceased) and Martha, wife of Frank C. Bunnell. Frank H., who resides on the homestead, married Mary, daughter of Daniel Brown, of Smithfield, and has children—Louis B., Nelly, Edward F. and May.

Early Roads.—The first settlements in the township were made along the banks of the Delaware, and, as a consequence, the earliest roads were cut through the forests in that portion of the township. One of the first, if not the first, was in early times used as a bridle-path. It followed the river from Bushkill to Shawnee, where it diverged to the northwest and pursued a direct course to Stroudsburg.

Another road, known as the Minisink road, or the Milford and Stroudsburg road, ran from Bushkill southwest through Smithfield township and thus on to Stroudsburg.

A highway known as the Middle road was laid out about fifty years ago, having for its objective points Bushkill and Shawnee. At the latter point it intersected the river road.

Several roads connected the river road with the Minisink road, among which was one beginning at the residence of John Turn, crossing the Middle road and terminating at the farm of Frank Coolbaugh.

A road starting at Moses W. Coolbaugh's runs northeast to Pike County, and is still used as a mail route.

The Coolbaugh road runs north from Coolbaugh Post-Office to Coolbaugh's mill, in Porter township, Pike County, and intersects the old factory road in Price township.

Villages and Post-Offices.—There are no settlements that may be dignified by the name of villages in Middle Smithfield. The hamlet of Maple Grove, in the southeast part of the township, consists of a tavern, kept by Jacob H. Place, a store, by Samuel Turn, a grist-mill, by Jacob Place, and a few dwellings. It has no post-office, most of the inhabitants receiving their mail at Bushkill.

Nearly three-quarters of a century ago, through the influence of John Coolbaugh, a post-office was established known as Coolbaugh Post-Office, the commission as postmaster having been held by various members of the family until the present time, when Rev. Charles Van Allen has the appointment. The mail was carried in a sulky, drawn by a single horse. Some years later a two-horse conveyance was added for the accommodation of the lumbermen on the Delaware in making their return trips. As the lumber business increased, greater facilities for travel became necessary, and the owners of the mail route from Easton to Milford, via the Water Gap, about 1828, placed on the route an elegant coach drawn by four sleek horses, and accommodating from twelve to fifteen passengers. Notice of the arrival at postal stations or points for changing was given by blowing a bugle, the melodious sound of the horn being a source of no little concern to men, women, and especially children, as the imposing vehicle approached.

Another post-office is located near the Pike County line, and known as Shoemaker Post-Office, with A. J. Shoemaker as postmaster A general store at this point is kept by Simeon Decker.

ORGANIZATION.—In the year 1794 Middle Smithfield was erected from the northern part of Lower Smithfield. The following facts concerning its erection are taken from the court records of Northampton County:

"On the 12th of August, 1794, Samuel C. Seely, John Biddis and Hugh Forsman, who were appointed by the court at April Sessions last, upon the petition of the inhabitants of the upper district of Lower Smithfield township Commissioners to view the said township and report whether it would be expedient to divide the same, and if so, in what manner, made report: That a division is highly necessary, and that the division line begin at the north of John Van Camp's mill-creek, and that the creek be the line until it runs up to the tail-race of said Van Camp's grist-mill, and up said race until it strikes the west end of the mill, and thence from the westmost corner of the mill a direct line until it reaches the saw-mill late the property of William Wells, Esquire, thence a due northwest course until it intersects the northern line."

Which report was read and confirmed by the court on the 12th of August, 1794. On the 11th of November, 1794, the court named the township so cut off Middle Smithfield. By the act erecting Wayne County, Middle Smithfield township was divided, and the part thereof set off to Wayne County was to retain the original name Middle Smithfield.

Middle Smithfield, as it existed after Wayne County was erected, extended from the Delaware River to the Luzerne County line, with an average width of five and one-half miles, being bounded southward by Northampton County and northward by Delaware township. Its boundaries remained unchanged while it was a part of Wayne County.

BURIAL-PLACES.—A very old burial-ground is located on the farm of John Turn and was formerly in use by the Dewitt family. John Dewitt and wife, his two sons, Cornelius and Levi, the wife of Jacob Dewitt, and one Parker are buried here.

A burial-ground equally as old is situated on the Jacob Michael farm, and many of the older members of the Michael family find here a last resting-place. A number of re-interments have been made from this ground, and the bodies removed to the cemetery connected with the Lutheran Church and elsewhere in the township.

The ground known as the Cemetery of the Presbyterian Church embraces a lot given by the Jaynes family, to which an additional tract was added by the Coolbaugh family, and three acres subsequently purchased by the congregation. It is neatly inclosed, and now the principal place of interment in the township. It is the burial-place of the Jaynes family, the Coolbaughs, La Bars, Frutcheys, Piphers, Places, Quigleys, Hannas, Overfields, Turns and many others.

EARLY SCHOOLS.—Very little can be said of the educational interests of the township at an early date. There were very few schools, of an inferior grade, and these were sustained almost entirely by a few leading families of the township. The school buildings were small, uncomfortable and frequently built of logs, in the most primitive fashion. Under these circumstances it was not unusual for the inhabitants to secure a teacher and donate a room in their own more attractive dwellings to purposes of instruction. The earliest teacher remembered was one MasterChesney, who exercised a vigorous discipline in a school-house that stood on the farm of John Turn, his services having been secured by subscription. At a later date a school-house was built on the same farm, then known as the Dewitt property, and the school taught at various times by two brothers named Hoffman, one of whom, named Charley, was a man of exceedingly convivial habits; he indulged, however, only during the vacation periods. Moses Depui, a man of fine attainments, also officiated in this school-house.

A school building was erected at an early date one-half mile from the residence of Frank Coolbaugh, the school being for some time taught by Mason Dimmock, a young man from the State of Connecticut.

A very early school was opened at Maple Grove, on the Pike County line, the original building being now a part of the dwelling of Simeon Schoonover.

The school territory of the township is now divided into ten districts, which are presided over by seven male and three female teachers. The number of scholars on the roll is two hundred and twenty-eight, and the average attendance one hundred and thirty-nine.

The total amount of tax levied in the township for school and building purposes is $1,206.70, and the State appropriation $281.86. The amount paid in salaries to teachers is $974.

Daniel McBeth, Emanuel Gonsaules, Adam Overfield, Henry Merceilus. Its first officers were John Coolbaugh, W. M. ; Daniel W. Dingman, S. W. ; Cornelius Coolbaugh, J. W. ; Mason Dimmock, S. D. ; Abram V. Coolbaugh, J. D. ; William Overfield, T. ; Samuel De Puy S.

The meetings were held in a lodge fitted for the purpose in the house of John Coolbaugh. As there is no record of a meeting held later than June 1827, it is presumed that the lodge was discontinued after that date.

Zion's and St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Churches of Smithfield and Middle Smithfield.—These two distinct organizations constitute a single parish, and their histories, being identical in essential respects, can be given together.

An especial interest attaches to these churches as being the outgrowth of the ecclesiastical organization in the county. Many years before Monroe County was formed, and the only settlement in all this region north of the Blue Ridge was at the point now occupied by the pretty village of Shawnee, the Lutheran and Reformed settlers in that locality erected there a Union Church,—the first, and for many years the only, house of worship in the county. The building was of stone, of fair dimensions, with the inevitable goblet pulpit, surmounted by a high sounding-board. A peculiarity of this ancient structure was the height of its windows, the sills coming above the heads of the standing worshippers, so made to prevent the possibility of the Indians firing in upon the congregation during worship, or when resort was had to its strong walls as a refuge from their frequent murderous raids. The site was also chosen with reference to this defensive feature, being an abrupt elevation of a little more than a hundred feet above the river flats, the ground sloping away from it on every side.

Unfortunately, however, the history of this church in these early times is almost entirely involved in obscurity. Not even can the names of the early pastors or missionaries be ascertained. The records are lost. The corner-stone remains fixed in the south wall of the Presbyterian Church built upon its site in 1853. This stone shows the date of its erection to have been 1752 ; but how long before that the congregations had been organized, whether or not there had been originally a triple union of denominations, the third being the Dutch Reformed, which is very probable, since many, if not the majority, of the original early settlers were of that creed, where the money was secured for so expensive a structure, and many other things it would be interesting to know, are matters of vogue conjecture.

The earliest church-book known to be in existence, now in care of the pastor of the Smithfield Lutheran Churches, bears date of May 18, 1798. The illuminated title-page has this inscription :

"Das allgemeine Kirchen-Buch der Unterschmidtfeldter Lutherischen und Reformirten Gemeinden in Northampton County in dem Staat Pennsilvanien."

This book contains, among other things, a record of baptisms with dates running back even to 1787. Rev. John Mann was pastor of the Reformed congregation from 1798 until 1800. The name of the Lutheran pastor serving at that time does not appear. The record seems to have been kept with tolerable regularity until about 1805, when probably the church had no regular pastors, and occasional preaching was furnished by ministers from Easton and New Jersey. Among these occasional preachers appear the names of Thomas Pomp, Reformed, of Easton, James Romeyn, "minister to the Low Dutch Church in Hackensack, N. J.," and others.

Rev. John Caspar Dill, Lutheran, assumed charge during the summer of 1806, and served the congregation until 1810. During his pastorate, and previously, the building was sadly out of repair; the doors and windows were destroyed, the roof leaked, and unfit for use as a place of worship, the sheep and other animals occupied it at will. Preaching was done, therefore, for a number of years in private houses in the neighborhood. Some time between 1810 and 1815, during the pastorate of Rev. Charles W. Colson, Lutheran, the young men of the two congregations thoroughly repaired the church, and services were resumed in it, which were kept up regularly until within a few months of its demolition, in 1852.

Rev. Peter Rupert, Lutheran, brother-in-law of Peter and John Zimmerman (who still survive), and Rev. Theodore L. Hoffeditz, Reformed, pastor of a congregation in Mt. Bethel, commenced to serve the two congregations simultaneously in 1815. Rev. Rupert's pastorate ended about 1827, although during his time, in the years 1820 and 1821, a Lutheran minister by the name of Henry Kurz confirmed a number of persons and administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper several times. Rev. Hoffeditz continued until 1833, when he was succeeded by Rev. J. P. Decker, whose resignation occurred in 1849. It was during the pastorate of Rev. Decker that the Reformed congregation, which had been much the stronger, numbering at least ninety communicant members, began seriously and rapidly to fall away. He was the last Reformed pastor who regularly officiated in the old church.

Rev. P. Rupert was followed by Rev. John Nicolas Mensch, who served the Lutheran congregation from 1830 until 1842. In the fall of 1842 Rev. George Heilig, who had been called that year from Centre Square, Montgomery County, commenced serving the congregation. It was during his pastorate that the venerable church (just one hundred years old) was abandoned. Very few Lutherans, or Reformed, resided any longer in the immediate vicinity, and as a new church edifice became an absolute necessity, it was deemed prudent to select some other more eligible locality for its erection. But the membership had become so widely separated that no agreement could be reached as to the most suitable place. It was decided, therefore, to build two churches,—Zion's about four miles farther up the river from Shawnee, to be convenient for residents on the Jersey side; and St. Paul's, at Craig's Meadows, about five miles northeast from Stroudsburg. The last services held in the old stone church, of which a record was kept, were confimation services on July 26, 1851, when the Rev. George Heilig confirmed eighteen persons, and a communion service on the following day, when eighty persons partook of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper at his hand. On the 23d of March, 1850, a meeting was held at the house of George M. Michael "for the purpose of appointing trustees to act as a building committee to build a church near the house of George Michael, to be called "Zion's Evangelical Lutheran and German Reformed Church." Henry Strunk, Jr., on the part of the German Reformed congregation, and Samuel Michael and John Michael, Jr., on the part of the Lutheran congregation, were appointed such committee.

Money and material were gathered that year, and on the 16th of June, 1851, the corner-stone was laid by the Rev. George Heilig, who preached on the occasion in the adjoining grove. The bricks used in the construction of the church, which were of very superior quality, were made by members of the congregation on the farm now occupied by Andrew Treible, within a half-mile of the church. The building was finished and dedicated in the fall of the same year, Rev. George Heilig preaching the sermon and performing the service. The first confirmation service held in the new edifice was on May 30, 1852.

In December of the following year (1853) a meeting was held at Jonas Metzgar's, when the erection of St. Paul's Lutheran and German Reformed Church at Craig's Meadows was definitely decided upon. On the part of the Lutherans, Charles M. Hoffman and David Yetter, and on the part of the Reformed, Jonas Metzgar constituted the building committee. In February of 1854 lumber was brought from "The Beech," bricks were secured, and by the 1st of April all necessary material had been conveyed to the spot. The building was finished during that year, and dedicated on the 1st day of January, 1855. Rev. George Heilig performed the dedicatory services, assisted on the occasion by Rev. Charles Becker, who had been chosen as pastor of the Reformed congregation. It is conceded that to Charles M. Hoffman—the only surviving member of that committee—more than to any other, is due the success of the enterprise, who gave to it all his time and energies, overcoming by his indefatigable efforts the many obstacles with which it was beset. Rev. George Heilig resigned in the latter part of the year 1856. He was succeeded by Rev. Rumpf, who remained in charge scarcely a year. Rev. S. S. Klein followed him, whose pastorate extended a little over two years. Rev. Theophilus Heilig was called in the summer of 1861. He assumed charge October 13th of that year, his father, Rev. George Heilig, having supplied his place several months previous to his arrival. His pastorate ended April 24, 1864. Rev. D. M. Henkel succeeded him, entering upon his duties as pastor in connection with the Stroudsburg Lutheran Church building enterprise, April 4, 1867. His pastorate ended in 1869. Rev. Luther A. Fox followed him, continuing in charge until October 15, 1871. He was followed by Rev. J. H. Fritz, whose pastorate extended from November 5, 1871, to October 31, 1874. Rev. George Diehl Foust immediately succeeded him, assuming charge November 1, 1874. On his retirement July 1, 1880, the present pastor, Rev. Theophilus Heilig for the second time, entered upon the duties of the pastorate, a mutual exchange of parishes having been effected with the Rev. Foust, who at once removed to North Wales, Montgomery County, to take charge of St. Peter's Lutheran Church, Rev. T. Heilig's late parish.

Although these churches were built as Union Churches, in the course of time the Reformed congregation, as a distinct organization, ceased to exist. There never were any Reformed services held in the Zion's Church, and at an early period in the history of the reorganized charge the few members of that denomination in the neighborhood united with the Lutheran congregation. At St. Paul's Rev. Charles Becker continued to serve the Reformed congregation from the date of the dedication of the church, January 1, 1855, until some time in 1859. Rev. George B. Dechant followed him, serving the congregation from 1860 until the spring of 1871. The year succeeding this the congregation had no pastor. Rev. Horace Daniels became their pastor in 1872, serving for one year. He was the last of the Reformed pastors. Since the date of his withdrawal (1873) the few remaining members of that congregation, who have not removed or united with the Lutheran congregation, have been absorbed by the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches of the neighborhood. Both church buildings have been repaired and repainted within the last ten years, and are neat and commodious structures. The communicant membership at Zion's is eighty; at St. Paul's, one hundred and twenty. The church council at Zion's consists of Elders John Zimmerman and Henry Treible; Deacons, Hiram Zimmerman, Christian Kantz and James Treible; Secretary, Moses Strunk; and Treasurer, Samuel Strunk; Sunday-school Superintendent, Christian Kantz. The officers of St. Paul's are the following: Elders, Harmon Kurtz and Theodore Y. Hoffman; Deacons, Jacob Ruster, Andrew Hoffman and Henry Fenical; Secretary, Luther Hoffman; Treasurer, John Yeisley; Sunday-school Superintendent, John Yeisley. The charge belongs to the "Evangelical Lutheran Ministerium of Pennsylvania and Adjacent States," a synod of the General Council of the United States. At this date the steady progress of the two churches is characterized by harmony and prosperity.

The Middle Smithfield Presbyterian Church.[1]—I can search back into the past, for anything in reference to the Church of Christ in this region of country, only about one hundred and thirty-five years. A hundred and fifty years ago the rude red man "chased the bounding deer" over our mountains, and paddled his light canoe in our waters. A very few whites were scattered here and there, struggling for subsistence in the forests, and among their savage brethren. They made little history and wrote less, so that very little is extant. The earliest account of any ministerial service that I possess is that of Rev. Azariah Horton, in May, 1742. A hundred and thirty-five years ago he was sent out as a missionary through the Delaware Valley by the Presbytery of New Brunswick. He prepared the Indians and the few whites, in a measure, for the coming of David Brainard. David Brainard labored up and down the Delaware, and in all the country adjacent, in 1744. After him followed Revs. Messrs. Boyd, Clark and McCrea, at different intervals, as time and circumstances would permit. The oldest church of which we have any record was an old stone meeting-house at (now) Shawnee. William Allen gave five acres of ground to this church in 1750. This was occupied by different denominations for many years, and it is a matter unsettled to-day between the (Dutch) Reformed Church and the Presbyterian Church, both claiming it. No record is made of supplies until 1761, when Mr. Clark, Mr. Tennant, Mr. Lyon,• Mr. Hannah, Mr. Schenck and others were appointed by Presbytery to missionate through this whole region of country. Rev. Mr. Peppard visited here, and after him Rev. Peter Wilson, up to some time about 1800. Very little is known of any of their labors, no record having been kept so far as is known and their labors being at so long intervals. In 1813 Rev. John Boyd was appointed to preach in Smithfield, then embracing this whole region of country and in 1816 he reorganized the "old stone meeting-house," at present Shawnee. He established the first Sabbath-school in the school-house near the present residence of James Place. After him Mr. Field preached a short time, then the Rev. David Tuttle, Rev. Nathaniel Conklin and Rev. J. Force. In 1825 Rev. Mr. Leek and Rev. Dr. John M. Dickey preached for a short time, and in the same year he was followed by Rev. Mr. Hyndshaw and Rev. Mr. Sturgeon. Rev. Mr. Hyndshaw was with us last year and stated that he preached at the "old stone meeting-house" at Stroudsburg and in John Coolbaugh's kitchen. He traveled up and down this country off and on for several years, and married several couples still living among us. Preaching was also held at this time by others: by Mr. Field, Mr. Force and Mr. Sturgeon, in the barn of the late Elder John V. Coolbaugh, in the absence of any church building. Supplies were obtained whenever and wherever they could. Rev. Messrs. Talmage and Charles M. Dickey also preached here about this time. Of the date of the organization of the Middle Smithfield Church there is no record, but it was doubtless organized at or about the same time the church at Stroudsburg was. The first minutes of this church, dated November 1, 1832, read thus: "The Presbyterian Church and Congregation of Middle Smithfield had been organized several years ago, but no minutes of its proceedings are extant. At the time of commencing this record the following individuals were members in full communion in the church, viz.: John V. Coolbaugh, John Malvin, John Turn, Elders." Then follow the names of twenty-five others, all of whom have gone to their final resting-place and eternal reward, save Mr. Elijah Quigley, who stands as the venerable sentinel of the century rolled into eternity. Presbytery sent as the first stated supply Mr. Samuel Sturgeon, who preached at Stroudsburg, at the "old stone meeting-house," at Shawnee, and in the barn of Mr. Coolbaugh, at this place. He was stated supply in 1829 and 1830. In 1831 and 1832, Rev. Charles Tappan occupied this same field. In November, 1832, Rev. Mr. Field was called to the Middle Smithfield Church and Stroudsburg, each church receiving half of his ministerial services. The next spring (March 11, 1833) the session met at the house of John Coolbaugh, and twenty-seven additional members were added to its connection, making in all fifty-two at this time, while Stroudsburg, the other half of the charge, had forty-eight members. In this year the Middle Smithfield Church building was erected, and in the following year was incorporated by the State Legislature as the "Middle Smithfield Presbyterian Church." Elders Coolbaugh and Malvin were the committee to procure the incorporation. Mr. Field continued as the joint pastor of this church and Stroudsburg for seven years, or until the spring of 1840. He was succeeded by Rev. Dr. John McNair, who supplied Middle Smithfield and Stroudsburg Churches for three months. In the fall of 1841 Middle Smithfield and Stroudsburg Churches called Rev. Baker Johnson. He continued his labors until 1846, when he confined his labors to Middle Smithfield, and Stroudsburg called Rev. William Scribner. Mr. Scribner remained in Stroudsburg until 1849, when Mr. Johnson was re-called and continued the pastor of Middle Smithfield and Stroudsburg Churches, preaching also at Shawnee until the spring of 1853. In the summer of this year Mr. Johnson removed, leaving vacant Middle Smithfield and Stroudsburg, and an important preaching-point in the "old stone meeting-house," at Shawnee. The little congregation was connected with this church, there being but one organization up to 1853. In 1854 Stroudsburg called Rev. Mr. Miller, and Middle Smithfield made out a call for Rev. Thaniel Condit, of Stillwater, N. J. In the mean time the congregation, now gathered at Shawnee, resolved to reorganize and rebuild the ancient church of that place, which had stood for over a century. The present church at Shawnee was according built in the summer of 1853 and in the fall, of this year was organized by the Presbytery of Newton as the "Shawnee Presbyterian Church." Mr. Condit declining the call of Middle Smithfield Church, the Presbytery of Newton sent Rev. J. Kirby Davis as stated supply for Middle Smithfield and Shawnee Churches. In the following spring a joint call was made out for his ministerial services, and on the 14th day of November, 1854, he was installed pastor. He continued thus until 1863, and in May of this year a committee of the Presbytery of Newton dissolved the pastoral relation of Rev. Mr. Davis and the Middle Smithfied Church. The church remained vacant until April, 1865, when Rev. Charles E. Van Allen was sent to Middle Smithfield by the Presbytery of Newton as a temporary supply. He remained as such until October 31, 1865, when he was ordained and installed pastor by a committee of the Presbytery of Newton. It being but a part of the former pastorate of Stroudsburg, and latterly of Shawnee, it was, from the circumstances of the case, very weak and feeble. The church then numbered only sixty members, and the Sabbath-school less. The church was dependent upon the charity of a fund left by a Mrs. Goodwin to the Presbytery of Newton and also to the home missions. When the sustentation scheme took effect she availed herself of aid from that source until she outgrew the garments that board offered her, and became self-sustaining in 1874.

The present officers are John Turn, Samuel Bush, Samuel Dewitt, Levi Hoffman, G. W. Peters, F. H. Smith, elders; Samuel Dewitt, Samuel Bush, C. F. Smith, Henry La Bar, G. W. Peters, trustees; Henry Dewitt, Edwin Bush, Henry La Bar, John Q. Strunk, directors.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—It is impossible to obtain from the records a full history of this organization. On the 28th of December, 1853, the property was deeded to the following board of trustees: William Clark, William Frankenfield, Adam Wellfeldt, William Decker and William Smith. It is probable that the same year the edifice was erected and regular services held from that date. The pastors, so far as can be determined, have been Reverends William Clark, William H. Dickerson, Reuben Van Sickle, Henry Litz, J. T. Strock, B. H. Senderlin, N. Van Sant, E. Meacham, J. I. Boswell, J. W. Hartpence, S. D. Harris, Henry Bice, J. D. Frazee, John Frome and Jacob H. Carpenter, the last-named being the present pastor. There are about one hundred names on the membership roll of the church, with which is connected a flourishing Sabbath-school of fifty scholars and a proportionate number of teachers. The present trustees and stewards are Elijah Detrick, Jacob Eylenberger, James Place, John K. Place, Silas Hannas, Benjamin Place and Benjamin Albert.

Sand Hill Methodist Episcopal Church.

—There are, apparently, no records in existence belonging to this organization. It is an older church than the one previously mentioned, the edifice having been erected in 1836, but neither pastor nor officers are able to communicate any facts relative to its history. It has a membership of seventy-five, and numbers among its trustees and stewards Miles Overfield, Thomas Gonsaules and James Depue. Its first pastor was Rev. Mr. Mains, the present incumbent being Rev. J. H. Carpenter.

SUMMER RESORTS AND BOARDING-HOUSES.—The beauty of the scenery and the exceeding healthfulness of the climate make Middle Smithfield very popular as a retreat for city residents. As a consequence, some of the most attractive boarding-houses in the county are found within its boundaries. Among the most prominent are the Echo Lake House, kept by Rev. Charles E. Van Allen, and situated but a short distance from that beautiful sheet of water. Mr. Van Allen has a spacious mansion, well furnished, with fine lawn, ample verandas and other attractions that add to the popularity of his home. Boats are at the disposal of his guests, and excellent fishing and bathing may be found in the lake. It is a favorite resort of Philadelphians.

The Buena Vista House is kept by Mrs. William Schoonover. It has a capacity for thirty guests, and is very desirably located, with a fine view of the Delaware.

Maple Grove Hotel is kept by Jacob Place. It is located in the southeast portion of the township, is conveniently arranged and can, without difficulty, entertain forty guests.

Dr. Gruer has a health resort, recently built, fitted with all the modern improvements and complete in its accommodations.

The Oak Grove Cottage, kept by C. F. Smith, is situated about five miles from Stroudsburg. It is very desirably located, on the edge of an attractive oak grove, with ample lawn, through which the Pond Creek meanders, broad piazzas, and all the appointments requisite to comfort.

The Mountain View House is owned by D. M. Turn. Its site is picturesque and its surroundings attractive. Twenty-five guests can be comfortably cared for.

Rudolph Schoonover has an inviting house near Maple Grove, with a capacity of twenty-five guests.

Among other popular summer retreats that are invariably well-filled are those of A. Jackson Coolbaugh, Newton Place and M. F. Coolbaugh.

CHAPTER X.

STROUD TOWNSHIP.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.—The township of Stroud, so called from one of the first settlers, before the borough was incorporated, is bounded on the north by Price township, east by Smithfield township, south by Northampton County, southwest by Hamilton and northwest by Pocono townships, Paradise touching it on the north and Jackson on the west.

The application to erect Stroud as a separate township was made to the court of Northampton County in 1816, and the order establishing it as a township granted on the 22d of January, 1817.

The surface of the township is partly hilly and partly level, a portion of the soil being of a gravelly character, and the remainder a limestone ridge. Much attention is paid to agriculture, many of the farms being well improved and abundantly productive. The southern portion, known as Cherry Valley, which is chiefly a limestone ridge, amply repays the labor of the harvestmen, while the northwest corner is stony and less productive. Corn, rye, oats and hay are the chief products, while most fruits are raised in abundance. The population of the township in 1820 was 1143, in 1830, 1631, and in 1840, 1206, exclusive of the borough. The tax valuation of real and personal property in 1844 was $248,816. The present population is 1680.

Two railroads pass through the township—the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad and the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad—the nearest depots being at East Stroudsburg and Stroudsburg, respectively. The county fair-grounds are also located in the township, in the suburbs of Stroudsburg.

NATURAL FEATURES.—The township is well watered by streams of more or less importance. Brodhead Creek enters the township from the north, and flowing south and southeast through Smithfield township, empties into the Delaware River. McMichael Creek rises in Pocono township, and, after a devious course of twelve or more miles, empties into Brodhead Creek. It is a rapid stream, serpentine in its course, and has been utilized for milling purposes.

Cherry Creek rises at the foot of the Blue Mountains, near the Wind Gap, and running along the foot of the mountain, flows into the Delaware at its entrance into the Water Gap. It is a rapid stream and affords several milling sites. Sambo Creek rises in Pike County, and flowing southwesterly through Smithfield township, pours its waters into Brodhead Creek. Pocono Creek enters the township at the northwest, and flowing southeast, empties into McMichael Creek.

The Blue Mountain range extends over the southern portion of the township. Running parallel with it is the elevation known as the Cherry Valley Hills, so called from the portion of the township through which they pass.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The earliest settlers, so far as recollected, in Stroud township were three brothers named Sly, who came down the Delaware Valley from Esopus about 1750 and located, one in Smithfield, another in Stroud on the farm now occupied by Josiah Bossard, and a third on land now the property of Charles and Michael Keller. The land owned by Peter Sly was subsequently purchased by Joseph Keller, one of the earliest and most prominent of the pioneers to this township. The Keller family were originally residents of the city of Zweibrucken, in the Palatinate, Germany. Necessity drove many of the citizens of the locality to emigrate, among whom was Joseph Keller, with an older brother and a half-brother named Guth (Good). They arrived in Baltimore, Md., in 1738, after a stormy passage and at once separated. Joseph found employment in Pennsylvania and in 1812 married Maria Engel Drum, also born in the Palatinate. He then settled in Plainfield township, Northampton County, Pa., and soon the bottom land on which he located was transformed to beautiful meadows. Six sons and one daughter were meanwhile born to Joseph Keller. Soon, however, a dark cloud gathered over the heads of this happy family. The French and Indian War was inaugurated, and on the 15th of September, 1757, the unsuspecting Keller family was suddenly overwhelmed. Joseph Keller was in a distant field plowing, while the mother and two small children were left at home, the former engaged in her household duties. Mr. Keller continued his work on this eventful day much later than was usual for him and returned home tired and hungry. Arriving at the house an unusual silence prevailed. He missed the voices of the children and the evidence of the evening meal that usually awaited him. Fear and dread overwhelmed him. He hastens to the barn, but an empty echo answers his call. He leaves the children that returned from the field with him in the house, with the infant in the cradle and seeks the nearest neighbor. On searching the fields they find the bloody corpse of his son Christian, the eldest boy, pierced through as with a spear and with his scalp torn from his head. No tidings of the mother and remaining children reached him until a later date, when Mr. Keller discovered that his wife and two sons, Joseph and Jacob, aged respectively three and six years, had been made captives and taken to Montreal, Canada. The first night of their flight a halt was made at Cherry Valley, twelve miles distant, and the following morning a weary march of four hundred miles was begun, the mother often being so exhausted that it was necessary to urge her on with a weapon at the back. On arriving she was sold to a French officer and the boys taken from her. Joseph was adopted by the sister of a young Indian who had recently died and thus his life was saved. Nothing was heard of the other son. Joseph was treated with great kindness by the savages and soon became accustomed to their barbarous life.

In 1760 Montreal fell into the hands of the British and all prisoners were released. In Joseph Keller's family Bible is written in a tremulous hand the following: "My wife came back anno 1760, on the 20th of October, but of my boys I have as yet heard nothing." A few years later the parents had the great joy of welcoming Joseph after his seven years of captivity in Canada. He became very skillful with the bow and arrow and had been promised a gun should he remain another year with his captors. Gradually he accustomed himself to a civilized life, but to the last retained his early fondness for wild sports. Some years later the War of the Revolution was inaugurated, in which he served as a soldier. The parents lived to a venerable age and were well and widely known for their piety. As long as she lived the mother kept the day of her deliverance from captivity as a day of prayer and thanksgiving. Joseph Keller, as has been previously stated, settled on the tract in Stroud township cleared by Peter Sly, having married Margaret Andre, to whom were born ten children. Two of the sons located in the township,—Peter on the homestead and John on the land now owned by Charles Keller. The wife of Peter, formerly Elizabeth Heller, still resides in the township. Her children are Charles, Daniel, Lewis, Theodore, William, John, Mary Ann (Mrs. Dennis), Catherine (Mrs. Rhodes), Louisa and Sarah. John Keller finally removed to the West and none of his children remained in the township. To Charles L. Keller the writer is indebted for the foregoing facts.

Major Jos. Drake died in the ninety-first year of his age. He came from Esopus soon after the advent of the Sly brothers and settled on the farm now owned by Joseph Swink, which he cleared and on which he built a log house. He married a Miss Houser and had children—Henry, Sarah, Amos, Adonijah, Joseph, Charles, Eliza and Margaret, all of whom with two exceptions settled in the township. Eliza (Mrs. Brotzman) still resides in the township; Edward, a son of Charles, occupies part of the homestead; and Margaret (Mrs. Joseph Swink) is also a resident of Stroud township.

James Brewer came to the township when eighteen years of age and found employment in the neighborhood. He married Margaret, daughter of George Felker, of the same township, and had ten children who grew to mature years. Of these, George resides in Poplar Valley; Mary, (Mrs. Jacob Heller), on Fox Hill; and Hannah (Mrs. Edinger), in Poplar Valley.

George Felker came to the township prior to the Revolutionary War, in which he was a soldier, and settled on the farm afterwards the property of John Shook. He married Barbara Metler, whose children were John, Joseph, George, Christopher and several daughters. The sons finally removed to other localities, leaving none of the name in the township. A daughter of John Felker (Mrs. Charles L. Keller) resides in Stroud.

Peter Frederick resided in Cherry Valley, where he was the owner of an extensive tract of land. His two surviving children were Peter and George, both of whom settled on the homestead. The children of Peter, who are Jacob, John, Susan, Ann and Sally, have all removed from the township. The children of George Felker are Jacob, John, Peter, Anthony and three daughters,— Christianna, Peggy and Betsey. Anthony and Betsey (Mrs. William Mostiller) are still residents of the township.

Charles Miller located at an early date upon the farm now owned by Lewis Drake. His children were Thomas, Abel, Amos, James and two daughters,—Nancy (Mrs. La Bar) and Katy (Mrs. Conrad Evans). The name of Miller is extinct in the township, the property being now owned by Lewis Drake, the great-grandson of Mr. Miller.

Benjamin Decker emigrated from Holland and subsequently became a Revolutionary soldier. On his discharge and removal to the State of Pennsylvania he settled in Stroud township, where he readily found employment. His children were a son James and four daughters,—Sally (Mrs. Pugh), Lydia (Mrs. John De Long), Anne (Mrs. George White) and Susan. James Decker married Sally James, of Smithfield township, and had children —Rachel, Lydia, Rebecca, Mary Ann, Benjamin, John, Charles and De Pue, of whom De Pue and Mary Ann (Mrs. Gordon) are the only members of the family residing in the township.

Thomas Gordon lived in the vicinity of Foxtown. He left sons—Abner, Samuel, George, William—and one daughter, all of whom are deceased. William, who was twice married, had children—Ollis, Jarvis, Albert, Elizabeth, Lewis, Garbert and Biedleman. Ollis married Mary Ann Decker and had children,—Luther, Lueezy and Martha, of whom Luther resides in Stroudsburg.

CHARLES M. FOULKE is a lineal descendant of Edward Foulke, who emigrated from Wales in the year 1698 and settled in Gwynedd township, Montgomery County, Pa., then a part of Philadelphia. The station Penllyn, on the North Pennsylvania Railroad, is located on the property then purchased, and was named after an ancestral house of the family in Wales. Hugh, the second son of Edward Foulke, was born in Wales in 1685, and accompanied his parents to America. He married Ann Williams and removed from Gwynedd township to Bucks County, where he died in 1760. He was a minister of the Society of Friends, and left surviving him a large family of children and grandchildren. His second son, John Foulke, was born in 1722 and died in the year 1787. He married Mary, daughter of Edward Roberts, and left seven children. He was from 1769 to 1775 a member of the Provisional Assembly and a citizen of much influence. Evan Foulke, the third son of John and Mary Foulke, was born at Quakertown in 1771, and married Sarah, daughter of William Nixon, a descendant of Morris and Susanna Morris, early settlers of Abington and Richland, the latter being a minister of the Society of Friends and highly esteemed. Evan Foulke, who owned large tracts of land near Quakertown, Bucks County, subsequently removed to Doylestown, Pa., and from thence, in 1817, to Cherry Valley, in Stroud township, Monroe (then Northampton) County. At a later date he made Zanesville, Ohio, his home, where his death occurred.

CHARLES M. FOULKE.

The children of Evan and Sarah Foulke are Olivia, Samuel, Charles M., Margaret (wife of James Michner), Susan (Mrs. George Linton), Tacy, Morris (who married Mary Edkin), Edward (whose wife was Miss Vicker) and Aseneth, (wife of Samuel Foulke). Of this number, Edward and Susan are the only survivors.

Charles M. was born February 26, 1801, in Quakertown, Bucks County, from whence, after a period of early youth spent at this point, he removed with his parents to Doylestown. At the age of sixteen he became a resident of Stroud township, Monroe County, Pa. Here his father had purchased extensive tracts of land and was materially aided by his sons in his farming enterprises. On the removal of Evan Foulke to Ohio, his son, Charles M., purchased the property in Cherry Valley and continued the pursuit of agriculture until his death.

He was married, in 1832, to Catherine, eldest daughter of Francis Elkin, who emigrated from England before the Revolution. Their children are Francis A., Sarah Jane (deceased), Susan L., Joseph F. (married to Caroline, daughter of Alfred McCully, of Camden, N. J.), Hannah M. (Mrs. Sydenham H. Rhodes), Samuel L. (married to Mary B. Wolf), Martha E. (Mrs. Joseph Primrose), Elizabeth E. (Mrs. Theodore G. Wolf). The grandchildren of Charles Foulke are Maria, Charles M. and Helen, children of Joseph F. and Caroline Foulke; Joseph, Annie, Arthur and Edna, children of Sydenham H. and Hannah M. Rhodes; Benjamin, Samuel, Levick and Bessie, children of Samuel L. and Mary B. Foulke; Theodore W., Elizabeth, Walter, Joseph and William, children of Joseph and Martha E. Primrose; and William Scranton, son of Theodore G. and Elizabeth E. Wolf. Mr. Foulke, after a residence of several years in Cherry Valley, removed to the farm now owned by Joseph F., his son, which he assisted in clearing.

The healthful air and many natural beauties of Monroe County have rendered it a very popular summer resort. Mr. and Mrs. Foulke enjoyed the distinction of being the first to open their homes to summer guests. Beginning with two young ladies, the capacity of their house was gradually increased until the spacious and attractive resort of Mr. Joseph F. Foulke was erected, with comfortable accommodations for one hundred guests. This, with the varied employments of a farmer, occupied Charles M. Foulke's attention during his active life. His religion was that of the Society of Friends, to which faith he zealously adhered, being an esteemed elder of that society. His life was characterized by the strictest integrity, a rigid sense of honor governing all the transactions of a lifetime. Kindly in his nature, and ever ready by word or deed to benefit his neighbor, he was universally esteemed and loved. Formerly a Whig and later a Republican in politics, he cared more for the attractions of the fireside than for the excitements of public life. His death occurred at his home in Stroud township on the 1st of March, 1883.

Aaron Cramer removed from Bethany to Stroud township about the year 1812, and settled one-half mile from Sprague ville, where much of his time was spent hunting, fishing and rafting. He died in 1831, leaving nine children, of whom the survivors are Nelson, of Pocono township; George, residing in Cincinnati, Ohio; William, in Price township; and Mary, in Centre County, Pa.

The children of Michael Ransberry were John, Michael, Henry and two daughters, Maria and Elizabeth. Henry, of this number, resided near Sprague ville, where he was a farmer. His children were Jesse B., John, George, Michael, Sally Ann, Susan B. and Eleanor. Henry Ransberry died in his ninety-eighth year. The widow of Michael resides in East Stroudsburg.

Manuel Salladay, the earliest representative of the family in Stroud township, owned property on the line between Stroud and Smithfield townships. His son George was the maternal grandfather of Henry Ransberry.

Joseph Hilbrun located near Sprague ville before the Revolution. He was an industrious farmer. He died at the advanced age of ninety-eight years.

Jasper Cotant lived in Stroud township at an early date, as did also John Lee, who was first a laborer and later purchased a farm, having married Ann Bush.

Peter and James Hollinshead, both physicians, came from North Carolina, and settled in Stroud township. James married Sarah, daughter of Jacob Stroud, and had seven children who grew to mature years. Sally (Mrs. Anthony McCoy), Edwin A., Stroud J., Daniel, Elizabeth, James and Ann. Stroud J. married Jeannette La Bar, who now resides in Stroudsburg. Dr. Peter married Ann, another daughter of Jacob Stroud, and settled at Stroudsburg. His only living descendant in the county is Peter Robinson, now residing in Stroudsburg.

Josephus Jacobus Aerts came with Lafayette from France and joined the patriots of the Revolution, changing his name for prudential reasons to Francis Joseph Smith. He afterward settled in Stroud township as a physician, and married Elizabeth Brodhead, of the same county. Their children are Jane (Mrs. Dimmock), Elizabeth (Mrs. Wallace), Sally (Mrs. Shoemaker), Rachel (Mrs. La Bar), Julia Ann (Mrs. Cross) and a son, Francis Joseph. The latter settled in East Stroudsburg, in the residence now occupied by his son Jesse. Mrs. Stroud Hollinshead, the daughter of Mr. La Bar, resides in Stroudsburg.

Derrick Van Vliet, born in Amsterdam, Holland, in September, 1699, emigrated to Esopus in 1728. He, with other emigrants, removed to Pennsylvania, cutting a road from Esopus via the Mine Hole to the Water Gap, and in 1734 located at the head of Rock Rift, in the Minisink country. He built a log house and resided for forty years in Stroudsburg, his death occurring September 4, 1774. His son, Charrick Van Vliet, located on Sambo Creek, where he followed farming pursuits during the Revolution. He married Barbara La Bar, and had one son, Derrick (who resided on an adjoining farm) and several daughters. Derrick married Rachel Staples, who was of English descent, and daughter of John Staples, who emigrated from England, and served seven years in the Revolutionary War under General Washington. Their children are Charrick, Richard, John S., and daughters,—Myra, Ann, Amanda and Rebecca, all of whom are deceased with the exception of John S., who resides in Sprague ville.

David Smiley settled on Brodhead Creek, below Sprague ville, as a farmer. His children were David, Thomas and several daughters. Both sons settled in the township. David married Mary Staples, and Thomas a Miss Boys. None of their children are now in the township.

James Bush resided on the farm now occupied by James Fisher. He had four sons, all of whom are deceased.

Matthias Shafer, doubtless, emigrated from Heidelberg, Germany, and settled in Lehigh County, from whence, at a later date, he removed to a farm situated on the line between Hamilton and Stroud townships. His children were a son Philip, and a daughter Catherine (Mrs. Adam Shafer). Philip, who settled in Stroud township, married Mary Loar, of the same township, whose children were two sons—Adam and Philip—and four daughters,—Susan (Mrs. Rouse), Mary (Mrs. William Mosteller), Anne (Mrs. John Huston) and Eve (Mrs. John Everhart). Philip, who is the only survivor of this number, and was born in 1801, still resides upon the homestead. He married Phebe, daughter of Jacob Phillips, of Hamilton township. Their children are four sons—Charles Scranton; Matthias, of Stroud township; John Davis, of Kansas; and Allen, of Hamilton township—and four daughters,—Sarah Ann (Mrs. Lewis Myers, of Stroudsburg), Maria (Mrs. Jeremiah Shiffer, of Scranton), Ellen S. (Mrs. Morris Decker, of Jersey City) and Harriet (Mrs. James Palmer, of Stroud township.)

John Davis Shafer, whose portrait we give, was born April 29, 1843, at Sunnyside, in Stroud township, two and one-half miles west of Stroudsburg, the county-seat of Monroe County. He is the seventh of eight children in the order of their ages, namely,—Charles, the eldest; Sarah Ann, now the wife of Lewis Meyers; Maria, widow of Jeremiah Shiffer; Ellen S., wife of Morris H. Decker; Harriet, wife of James Palmer; Mathias, John Davis and Allen, the offspring of Philip Shafer and Phebe, his wife.

The subject of this sketch passed his boyhood at Sunnyside, tilling the soil in summer and attending the public school at Shafer's schoolhouse in winter, until he arrived at the age of seventeen years. He then commenced teaching school in the winter in the public schools of Monroe County, and to attend private school in summer, thus preparing himself for college.

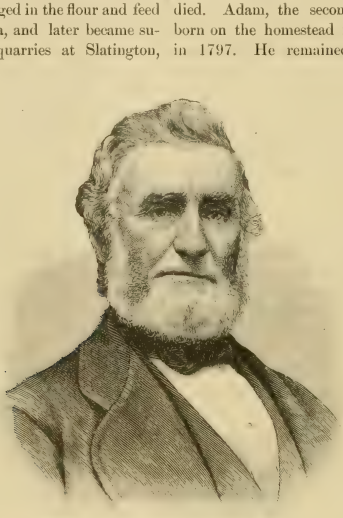
J. D. Shafer

He entered Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1865, but quit college in his sophomore year, and started for the Missouri Valley. After visiting St. Joseph, Missouri, and Omaha, Nebraska, he landed at Leavenworth, Kansas, April 2, 1867. The following week he engaged as a teacher in a private school, and read law during spare hours. In November of that year he entered the law-office of Thomas P. Fenlon, and, June 24, 1868, was admitted to practice at the bar of Leavenworth as an attorney and counselor-at-law. Here he has since resided and practiced his profession, having built up a large and lucrative practice, both in the State and the United States courts, and taken rank among the leading lawyers of Kansas.

Mr. Shafer comes from a long-lived people. His father was born April 22, 1801, and is still living at Sunnyside. Philip Shafer, the grandfather of John, was one of the first settlers in Monroe County. The stone mansion erected by the grandfather in his youth at Sunnyside, in which John and his father were born, is still standing, and, like the castles on the Rhine and at Heidelberg, whence he came, will, unless destroyed by fire, doubtless stand for ages. There the grandfather died at the advanced age of ninety-one years. Phœbe, the mother of John, also died there, August 2, 1874, aged sixty-eight years. Both lie buried in the necropolis on the west end of the old homestead.

John Brown resided on a farm near East Stroudsburg. He had sons,—John and Jacob. The children of Jacob are Daniel, Robert and Edward, the latter being the only survivor. John's family have all removed from the township.

Isaac Burson removed from Bucks County to Smithfield township before the War of the Revolution. Becoming alarmed at the frequency of Indian massacres, he returned again to his native county, where the remainder of his life was spent. He married a Miss Blacklidge and had children—James, William, Rachel, Jane, John and Eliza. James Burson was born in 1777, in Smithfield township, and removed with his parents to Bucks County. Returning again to Monroe (then Northampton) County, he married Deborah, daughter of Colonel Jacob Stroud, and had children—Danelia, Caroline (Mrs. William Hollinshead), Jacob, Elizabeth, Isaac, Emily, Stroud and Lewis. But three of this number survive—Caroline, who resides in Wisconsin, and Stroud and Lewis, who are residents of Stroudsburg.



Jacob Postens, on his removal from Bucks County, settled on a farm in Stroud township, now owned by Jabez Angle. He married Nancy Burson, whose children were James, Sally (Mrs. Arthur), Henry, Charles, Edward, William and Jane (Mrs. John Brown). James, of this number, settled on the homestead, married Mary Dean, and has children—Jacob, of East Stroudsburg; Emily, who removed to Illinois; Elizabeth, who resides in Middle Smithfield; Hetty, of Lackawanna County, Pa.; and James, Sally, Martha and Willis, of Stroudsburg. James, a son of Charles Postens, resides on his father's property, in Smithfield township. Two children of Edward, Philip Shroder and a daughter (Mrs. Robert Huston), are residents of Stroudsburg.

Leonard, son of Adam Andre, removed from Plainfield, Northampton County, to Stroud township in 1808, and settled on a farm now owned by the widow of James Andre. With farming he combined the trade of a blacksmith. He married Sarah, daughter of John Kemmerer, of Hamilton township. Their children are Adam, who married Blandina Jayne; James, married to Sarah Kemmerer, who has four children; Charles R., married to Hannah Van Buskirk, of Union County, who has two children; Mary Ann, deceased (Mrs. Philip S. Brown); Catherine (Mrs. Samuel Boys); Caroline (Mrs. Daniel Boys); and Ellen (Mrs. E. T. Croasdale). Charles R. is a resident of Stroudsburg, and Ellen of the Water Gap.

John Huston came from Trenton, N. J., to Stroud township in 1772, and settled on a farm now owned by Robert Huston. He married Catherine, daughter of Eliakim Anderson, and sister of Lieutenant-Governor George Anderson, of Trenton. Their children are William, George, John, James, and three daughters,—Elizabeth, Rebecca and Mary. John married Ann Catherine Shafer and reared thirteen children. Those still living are Lavinia (Mrs. Walter), Elizabeth (Mrs. Frantz) and Robert, of Monroe County; Samuel, Joseph, Nathan and Tacy Ann, of Iowa; and Frank, of Montana.

Joseph Kerr, who was of Scotch-Irish descent, removed, when a lad of three years, to Ireland, and emigrated to America during the War of 1812. He engaged in the flour and feed business in Philadelphia, and later became superintendent of slate quarries at Slatington, Northampton County, Pa. He was twice married and had eleven children, among whom was James H. Kerr, born in Stroudsburg, who resides on the homestead, in Stroud township. He married Catherine M., daughter of Judge Moses Coolbaugh, and has two sons, Frank C. and Joseph M., both druggists in Stroudsburg.

T. W. Rhodes

THOMAS W. RHODES.—The Rhodes family, who were among the early settlers of Monroe County, are of German origin. Their ancesters emigrated to America prior to the War for Independence and settled, it is believed, in Pennsylvania. The great-grandfather of Thomas W. was killed at the battle of Brandywine, which is all that is known of him. His son, Jacob Rhodes, was born near Bethlehem, Pa., where he grew to man's estate, married and raised a family of children and where he died. Adam, the second son of Jacob, was born on the homestead farm, near Bethlehem, in 1797. He remained at home until his marriage to Catherine Beasecker, who was also born near Bethlehem, when he removed to Hamilton township, Monroe County, which was then in Northampton County, where he bought the farm now known as the old Williams farm. It was only partly cleared, and of it Mr. Rhodes made a pleasant home, where he resided many years. He finally sold it and purchased a small place and retired from farming. He died at the home of his son Jacob, in Stroud township, in 1846. His wife survived him until February, 1864, when she passed away at the ripe age of eighty-six years. They were both members of the Lutheran Church for many years. Their children were Adam, Nancy, Abraham, John and Leah (all deceased), Thomas W., Rachel, Jacob and Eliza.

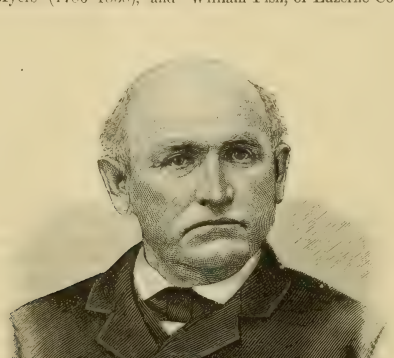
Thomas W. Rhodes was born in Hamilton township August 10, 1811, where he remained until seventeen years of age, obtaining such limited education only as a few months' attendance at the winter schools in his vicinity afforded. At that age he became an apprentice to George Keller, a carpenter, who resided on the farm now owned by Mr. Rhodes. With him Mr. Rhodes made his home during and after his apprenticeship of three years. After his trade (that of a carpenter) was learned he went to work at the millwright business, which he followed many years. For nine years he worked for Mr. George Linton, three years of the time as foreman. He then commenced business on his own account and kept several companies at work building mills in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. In 1849 he took charge of the lumber business of Williams Brothers and John Comfort, and remained with them six years. In 1833 he bought the home where he now resides, where he has ever since remained and where he intends to spend the remainder of a long and well-spent life. In 1853 he gave up the building of mills and lumbering and remained at home, but has ever since been in active business. In 1858 he built the Stroudsburg Bank building, and in 1865 the Stroudsburg Woolen-Mills. Four years later he built the Lutheran Church of Stroudsburg. In 1856 he helped organize the Stroudsburg Bank, of which he has been for twenty-nine years a director. In 1865 he became a director in the Stroudsburg Woolen-Mills Company, and three years later its president, which position he has ever since held. Since 1845 he has been a director in, and manager and surveyor of, the Monroe Mutual Fire Insurance Company. With his whole family, Mr. Rhodes is a member of the Lutheran Church, in which he has been elder, deacon and trustee. In politics he is an ardent Republican, and has held various township offices.

During the Rebellion he was three times appointed one of a committee to clear his township from the drafts. To this arduous and difficult task Mr. Rhodes applied all his skill and energy and in each and every case was successful—at one time accepting the position on the committee only after others had tried and failed. On the 14th day of January, 1836, he was joined in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Heller, daughter of Solomon and Mary (Beninger) Heller; she was born March 5, 1818. Their children are Sydenham H., born April 18, 1837; Charles L., May 23, 1839; Merion W., April 1, 1841; Ellen A., January 6, 1843 (she died April 4, 1845); Edward H., January 23, 1845; George H., January 13, 1847 (died April 4, 1881); Martha S., July 9, 1849; and Johnson G., October 7, 1851. Mrs. Rhodes died January 4, 1853. For his second wife Mr. Rhodes married, July 5, 1853, Catherine Keller, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Heller) Keller. She was born December 24, 1822. Their children were Steward T., born June 3, 1854; Erwin J., born August 29, 1856; Mary M. and Jennie L., born April 9, 1860; Emma C., born January 10, 1863; and Millard F., born May 5, 1866. Joseph Keller, Mrs. Rhodes' second grandfather, married Mary Andrews, who bore him children as follows: Adam, Leonard, Jacob, John, Joseph, George, Henry, Peter, Elizabeth, Sarah and Mary. Peter married Miss Ellen Heller and became ultimately a farmer in Stroud township, and owned and improved the farm which is still owned by his estate. He died September 20, 1878. His wife is still living and is in her eighty-eighth year. Mr. Keller and wife were members of the German Reformed Church. In politics he was a Republican and held different township offices. Their children were John, Susan (deceased), Catherine, Daniel, Charles, Mary Ann, Joseph (deceased), Lewis, Louisa, Sarah, William and Theodore.



Simon Barry.—Walter Barry, a native of England, came to Philadelphia about the beginning of the eighteenth century, and subsequently became one of the pioneer settlers in Hamilton township, Monroe County, Pa., where he reared two sons—Walter and Robert.

He settled on the tract of land now owned by his grandson, Joseph Barry, who is a son of Walter, and the farm has been in the family since.

Walter Barry was a man of correct habits, a Lutheran in religious persuasion, and lived to the great age of one hundred and eleven years, dying in the latter part of the last century.

His second son, Robert Barry (1778–1834), married Elizabeth Myers (1786–1858), and spent his life in Hamilton township, a farmer, where he reared a large family of children, viz., Joseph (deceased), was a farmer in Pocono township; Lewis, died in Stroudsburg; Abram, read law and was admitted to the bar of Monroe County, where he practiced for some time (he subsequently removed to Kansas, where he died); Francis, resides in Hamilton township; Melchior, is a farmer in Kansas; Simon, subject of this sketch; Robert, a farmer in Stroud township; Catherine, married Moses Swink, of Monroe County, where both died; Ann, married and removed to Indiana; Elizabeth, is the wife of Gabriel Davis, of White Haven, Pa.; Christina (deceased), was the wife of Jacob Lace, of Scranton; Rachel (deceased), was the wife of Isaac Slutter, of Hamilton township; Caroline, married a Mr. Whitehead, and resides in Kansas; and Julia (deceased), married William Fish, of Luzerne County, Pa.

Simon Barry

Simon Barry, son of Robert, was born in Hamilton township October 6, 1824, and was, therefore, only ten years of age at the death of his father. He resided with his brother Abram after his father's decease until several years after reaching his majority, and was engaged on his farm in Stroud township. He engaged for some three years in the lumber business on Brodhead Creek, and subsequently for five years, in partnership with Abram, kept the Washington Hotel in Stroudsburg, which business relations closed in 1855. In 1852 Mr. Barry married Frances, a daughter of Dr. John W. and Elizabeth (Bidleman) Hogan, the former a native of Dublin, who came here while a young man, was a teacher, and was lost at sea in 1840; the latter, a native of Bucks County, died in 1872, aged sixty-three years. Mrs. Barry was born September 20, 1833, and has no children. Both herself and husband are members of the Methodist Church at Stroudsburg, and contributors to the worthy and charitable interests of the community.

To the time of his marriage Mr. Barry had had little opportunity for laying aside anything for himself, or of making any preparations for a home, and this epoch of his life may be said to be the real starting-place where the race began to carve out a home and fortune for himself. He has been engaged with Richard Staples, for a period of nearly thirty years, in the lumber business, in Monroe, Luzerne and Pike Counties, shipping large quantities to Philadelphia and other markets, and making large sales to railroad corporations, in the construction by contract of sections of the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad, in the building of a large number of bridges for the Lehigh Coal Navigation Company and in the building of bridges in Monroe County.

He alone, at the time of the building of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, contracted and completed sections of the road-bed. In 1872, in connection with Richard Staples, Mr. Stiles, Judge Dreher and Charles Palmer, he built the Luzerne Ochre Works, on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, in Luzerne County, which were burned a few years afterwards, and rebuilt by the same company and sold. In 1886, with Richard Staples & Sons, he repurchased the paint works, and is about rebuilding and preparing to engage in the manufacture of ochre on a large scale.

Mr. Barry has been a large dealer in real estate, and is said to have planted a larger number of shade-trees and apple orchards on his various properties than any other man in this section of the State. He built his present residence in 1876, and the brick residence adjoining in 1858, both of which are on the south side of McMichael Creek, just outside the borough of Stroudsburg.

While he has been among the most active business men of Monroe County, he has found time to bear his share of public burdens. He was an active member of every committee for the township of Stroud, appointed during the late Civil War, for the purpose of raising volunteers, serving as treasurer of the bounty fund until its final disposition after the close of the war. He has served as supervisor of the township some eight years since 1861, as school director for twenty-one years, and as treasurer of the school board for eighteen years. He was one of the incorporators of the Excelsior Building and Loan Association, in 1878, of which he has since acted as treasurer. Mr. Barry is a man of sterling characteristics, judicious and industrious in the management of his affairs, and labors to fulfill the honest duties of the citizen.

Richard F. Schwarz.—Prominent among those who made small fruit-growing and market gardening a science and a success we find the name of Richard F. Schwarz, whose father, Frederick Schwarz, was born in Goslon, Germany, October 20, 1819. His education was obtained at the public schools, after which he started out in life as a commercial traveler. In this calling he saved some means, with which he commenced the manufacture of wall-paper, and made the enterprise a success, becoming one of the foremost men in Germany in his line of business. His death occurred in 1879. He married Miss Ida Schmidt, who was born in Amhalt, Germany, and who bore him the following children,—Oscar F., Helen, Melaine and Richard F., the subject of this sketch, who was born in Amhalt, Germany, October 31, 1852. He attended the public schools until thirteen years of age, and then entered the Ducal Gymnasium in Amhalt, from which he graduated in 1868. He subsequently spent two years at the Mercantile College, and graduated therefrom. One year was then spent by him as a clerk in the office of L. Moosbach, wholesale dry-goods merchant. In May, 1871, he took passage in the steamer "Rhien," for New York, where he landed after a passage of thirteen days. He at once entered the employ of K. Kuhn, a wholesale tobacconist of New York, as a traveling agent, although unable to speak a word of English. In three weeks, however, he mastered the language. He remained with Mr. Kuhn two years, and then engaged in other enterprises until his marriage, when he visited his native country in company with his wife. On his return from Europe he traveled through the West, finally settling in Chicago, where he entered the employ of Mr. Kronberg, wholesale jeweler, as book-keeper and traveling agent, remaining two years, when, his health failing, he came East on a visit to his brother-in-law, Mr. Savage, of Stroud township. In the spring of 1875 Mr. Schwarz bought five acres of land, which included his present home, intending it only as a summer residence. As a diversion, while recovering from his illness, he worked in his garden, and becoming interested in truck-farming, determined to make it a business, encouraged in so doing by Luke W. Brodhead, to whom he is much indebted for the success which has attended his efforts. In 1878 he added thirteen acres of land to his first purchase, all of which is now under a high state of cultivation, and used for growing small fruits and vegetables. He has brought water from the hills half a mile away, and, by means of a complete system of pipes, hose and ditches, irrigates his land, which he has found to be the only way to make his business a success. He finds a ready market for his produce in Binghamton, Stroudsburg, Water Gap and the surrounding country. In 1881 he again went abroad and visited the principal capitals of Europe, from whence he wrote a series of letters to the Monroe Journal. In politics Mr. Schwarz is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in his party and its workings. He has been a member of the County Committee eight years, of the State Democratic Committee two years, and has held various township offices. On the 4th day of August, 1873, he was joined in marriage to Rosine C., daughter of John and Elizabeth Savage. They have one child, Frederick J. O., born January 17, 1884.

R. F. Schwarz

Early Schools.—The earliest schools of the township were subscription schools, the expense of instructing those children whose parents are too poor to pay having been borne by the county. Most of the children of the township who were sufficiently near attended the schools of Stroudsburg. In 1827 a schoolhouse was built of logs on the Cherry Valley road, near the present residence of George Miller. The earliest teacher remembered was a man named Hasbrouck, whose services were secured for two winters, and some years later for a longer period, when he was advanced in years. He was thoroughly educated, by profession a lawyer, and frequently entertained his patrons with lectures on a variety of subjects.

Another teacher was Joseph Keller, after which the services of Charles La Bar, of Northampton County, were secured. Two school buildings have since superseded this primitive structure,—one in the Keller District and another in the Harmony District. Squire De Pue gave land nearly a century ago for the erection of a school building in Smithfield township, which was the resort of many of the children of Stroud township.

The school territory of the township is now divided into twelve districts, which are in charge of thirteen teachers. There is an average attendance of two hundred and fifty-five scholars, although a much larger number of children are enrolled. The total amount of tax levied for school and building purposes is $2148.21, and the State appropriation is $312.57. There is paid salary to teachers $1320. The schools of the township are in a flourishing condition.

Early Burial-Places.—The earliest burial-place in the township is the Keller burial-ground, located on the Keller farm, now owned by Chas. Keller, the grandson of Joseph Keller, who first inclosed it. It was used chiefly by the family and immediate friends, but has been for some years abandoned. The families who have used it as a place of interment are the Schlechts and Brewers, one Peter De la Grue, a Frenchman, the Felker family and others. It is believed that this cemetery was in use fully one hundred years ago.

The German Reformed Church, which was erected in 1828, has an incorporated burial-ground attached to it, which came into general use on the abandonment of the Keller plot. The first interment was that of Wm. Azer, which was followed by that of Morris Heller. The Kellers, Fredericks, Hohmshields, Felkers, Hellers, Rhodeses, Myerses and other families are buried here. It is doubtless the most popular and generally used cemetery in the county. In the southwest part of the township, along the Cherry Valley road, is a grave-yard more than one hundred years old, now in disuse. It is located on the old Frederick farm, now owned by Ezra Hunsicker, but was discontinued as a place of interment fifty years ago. The old Hollinshead grave-yard, located on the road from Stroudsburg to Stormsville, is still mentioned. One Van Fleet found here a last resting-place as early as 1744, and a stone in fair state of preservation still marks the grave.

The Stroudsburg Cemetery, used by the residents of the borough and elsewhere mentioned, lies within the township limits. There is also a cemetery at Spragueville and one connected with the Wesley Chapel.

The Shafer burial-ground, on the road between Stroudsburg and Snydersville, is among the oldest in the township.

Villages and Hamlets.—The only hamlet in the township is Spragueville, situated in its northern corner, a settlement containing a tannery owned by George L. Adams & Co., a store kept by Charles Dedrick, a blacksmith-shop by Charles Transue and a grist-mill owned in conjunction with the tannery and managed by John Wyckoff. The postmaster of the place is Charles Dedrick. A saw-mill was built at an early date at this point and conducted by Shroder Brown. William Steeples, having found his services in demand in connection with the saw-mill, built a house, which he occupied until he was succeeded by John Lee. William White soon after purchased land and built the tannery, to which was later added a general store, both now managed as before mentioned.

The tannery, which is now owned by George L. Adams & Co., was built more than forty years ago by William White, who operated it successfully for some years, when it became, by purchase, the property of Loring Andrews, of New York City, who, in turn, sold it to Day, Wilcox & Co. Since 1881 it has been the property of the present owners, George L. Adams & Co. Twenty-five men are employed in its different departments. It consumes sixty tons of bark per week, and during that period produces five hundred and forty sides, and finds its chief market in Boston. Its manager is G. L. Adams and its foreman G. B. Decker.

EARLY TAVERN NORTH OF THE MOUNTAIN.—During the early government of the province houses of entertainment were regularly licensed, but no revenue seems to have been derived therefrom until the year 1704, as indicated by the folllowing quaint record of the proceedings of the Provincial Council of that year:

"At a council held at Philadelphia, the 7th, 7th, 1704.

PRESENT:

The first inn north of the mountain and situated in the present Stroud township was kept by Mrs. John McMichael in 1762. It was located at the foot of Mount Paul, two miles from Stroudsburg, on the main highway between Nazareth and the Delaware River at Shawnee, and then connecting with the main road.

Mount Paul is situated about two miles west of Stroudsburg, near the residence of Colonel Norton. At the foot of the "Mount" resided John McMickle—or McMichael, as the name is more frequently written—a man conspicuous in the early history of this portion of the country. He applied for the lands occupied by the late John W. Huston in 1741 (as Mr. William S. Rees informs the writer), and lived on a tract of land in the warrantee name of Solomon Jennings, which is also a part of the farm of Col. Norton. McMichael kept at this place the first inn or tavern north of the mountain. License was however applied for in the name of his wife.

The petition is interesting as it is signed by some of the early settlers and is given as a part of the history of the times,—

"Petition of Hannah McMichael for Licence allowed at Sept. term, Northampton county, 1762.

"To the Hon. the Justices of the Court of Genl. Quarter Sessions of the Peace held at Easton for the County of Northampton the 21st day of September 1762.

Robert O'Neale	William Smith
Nicholas Depui (Jr?)	John Smith
Joseph Hains	John Picquit
Robert Hanna	James Lason
John Vancampen	Evan Morgan
Cornelius Vancamp	Benjamin Jolly"

In the foregoing petition mention is made of Samuel Depui's as a "Public-House." It was not such in the sense of a tavern, though the generous hospitality of the family was well known then as in later years. The original dwelling was near the present stone mansion at Shawnee, which was erected in 1783.

The following is given to show the respect entertained for the above petitioner, Hannah McMichael:

"Extracts from the Diary of the Nazareth Church, 1746, April 23d:

"The wife of John McMichael, with a neighbor friend from the Blue Mountains, passed through on a visit to Bethlehem, April 25th." "John McMichael's wife, who, with her neighbor Susan Ray, had been on a visit to Bethlehem, returned. They could not find language to tell how pleased they were."

The Second Tavern.—On the petition of ninety of the citizens of Smithfield (now Stroud) a license to keep a tavern was granted to James Logan in the year 1778. The petition reads as follows: "We the subscribers do certify that in our opinion James Logan, of Smithfield township, in the County of Northampton, is a person qualified to keep a Tavern, having given to people that Travel that way Good Entertainment as reasonable as any other Tavern Keeper in these Parts, Likewise using his Customers Civilly & Genteelly, we think it will be advantageous for the parts that he lives in for him to be continued or Permitted to keep a House of Public Entertainment where he now lives. Given under hands the first day of Sept. 1778."

This petition was signed by the prominent citizens of the neighborhood. The place appears to have been a rendezvous for the military men of the times, as some twenty or more of the petitioners were officers in the army of the Revolution, ranking from colonel to ensign. How the signatures were obtained, however, in this critical period of the war, it is difficult to determine, for it is known that several of the number were at that time in active service in the field. This tavern was located not far from McMichael's Inn, licensed sixty years before, on the road from Stroudsburg to the Wind Gap, by way of Kunkletown. The place now known as "Logan's Hill" was probably not the site of the Logan's tavern.

This town is spoken of in the general history of the county as supplying the needs of the militia of 1784.

HOTELS AND SUMMER RESORTS.—In Stroud township are located some of the most attractive and popular summer resorts in the county.

BLEAK HOUSE, situated on Godfrey's Ridge, near Stroudsburg, is kept by Samuel L. Foulke, M.D. It has a commanding view of the valley and surrounding country, and enjoys exceptional advantages of location. It has accommodations for twenty-five guests, and is well patronized.

HIGHLAND COTTAGE, also located on Godfrey's Ridge, a spur of the Blue Mountains, between Cherry and Beaver Valleys, is the property of F. & S. Foulke, and receives within its attractive walls fifty guests. It is open for a period of six months of the year, and during the busy season is always full to overflowing.

HIGHLAND DELL HOUSE is owned and kept by Joseph Foulke. It is specially attractive in point of location, has a capacity for one hundred guests and is open for half the year. This house, as also those previously mentioned, is supplied with vegetables and fruits from the land lying adjacent.

STITES' MOUNTAIN HOUSE is located between the Blue Ridge and the Pocono Mountains, eight miles above the Delaware Water Gap, six miles from Stroudsburg and one and a half miles from Sprague ville. The situation is particularly desirable. It is surrounded by two beautiful mountain streams, in which there is excellent trout fishing in the months of April and May, and good boating. It has accommodations for nearly one hundred guests. There are pleasant walks, several acres of pine grove, a cascade and a beautiful glen on the place. It is one of the most desirable and romantic places to spend the summer that can be found in the country.

William H. Owens has a commodious and attractive residence one-half mile southwest of Stroudsburg, which he devotes to the entertainment of summer guests.

HISTORY OF THE BAPTISTS OF MONROE COUNTY, AND OF THE PRESENT BICKLEYVILLE BAPTIST CHURCH, LOCATED NEAR EAST STROUDSBURG.—The history of the Baptists in what is now the county of Monroe may be traced back to a very early period. According to the records of the Philadelphia Baptist Association, a Baptist Church was constituted in 1785, in what is now called Middle Smithfield, being distant from Stroudsburg, the county-seat, near ten miles. During this same year (1785) this old and early church united with the Philadelphia Association, and remained a member of that body about seventeen years. The constituent members were principally from the Jayne family—one branch of the family being ancestors of the well-known Baptist, Dr. Jayne, of Philadelphia. Elder David Jayne was for many years the pastor, preaching not only in Middle Smithfield, but more or less in the settlements around.

The Philadelphia Association desiring to know its condition, in 1802 appointed Elder James McLaughlin and William White a committee of visitation. This committee reported that there were left but two or three of the members in the locality, that the meeting-house also had fallen into decay, and that the property had passed into other hands. In view of these facts, and there seeming to be no prospect of reviving the cause, it was resolved that the name of the church be dropped from the Associational minutes.

Unfortunate, however, and evidently unnecessary as was the extinction of this particular church, yet Baptist sentiment, as was naturally to be expected, still prevailed in the county, and at last the cause was again revived at Stroudsburg, the county-seat.

Samuel Rees, of Baptist parentage, from Montgomery County, after a short residence in the vicinity, married into the family of Colonel Stroud. Mr. Rees, not long after his marriage, returned to his former home, where Mrs. Rees was converted and soon after united with the Baptist Church of Great Valley. Mrs. Rees, having inherited a large estate by the will of her father, Colonel Stroud, it became necessary for her and her husband to return to Stroudsburg. This step likewise led to their making arrangements for establishing Baptist services. This occurred in February, 1808, when Mr. and Mrs. Rees, in conjunction with a family by the name of Miller, living near the Blue Mountain, invited Elder Joseph Matthias, of Hilltown, Bucks County, to make a visit to Stroudsburg and hold preaching services. This invitation was accepted, and again and again for twenty years and more did this good man make regular visits into the county.

In August, 1830, Elder Matthias, assisted by Elder John S. Jenkins, another devoted man, held in Stroudsburg a revival meeting. As a result of this revival, the propriety of constituting a church, called the "Stroudsburg Baptist Church," began to be agitated. Nothing definite, however, was decided until the 2d of October, 1830, when, at a meeting called for the purpose, it was resolved by the Baptists of the locality to proceed. The fifth Sabbath of October, 1830, was fixed upon as the time, and Brethren Matthias and Jenkins were invited to take part and assist in consummating the design. At the time designated (the 30th of October) the usual public services on such occasions were held, and thirteen persons came forward and signed the covenant and adopted the articles of faith of the Philadelphia Association of September 25, 1742.

It appears from the minutes of this church that it had two pastors, Rev. Thomas Ritchie and Elder Charles Cox. The deacons of the church were John Johnston, Abel Miller, Thomas Miller and James Morgan. The church clerks were James Morgan, Wayne Drake and Charles U. Warnick. The total membership was one hundred and ten.

This church, constituted as it was under very favorable circumstances and at the county-seat, and no denomination at the time having a better outlook in Stroudsburg, finally, like the church in Middle Smithfield, went down. The total extinction of this church becomes, necessarily, the subject of deepest regret, for which no satisfactory explanation can be given.

It will be necessary at this point to speak of one more attempt to establish a church in these parts, but which, like the two already named, at last became extinct. It was called the Coolbaugh Baptist Church, constituted in 1844, and possessing a good stone building and located at what is called Spruce Grove, on the North and South turnpike, and within five miles of Tobyhanna, one of the stations on the Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad. This church in 1844 was the only church in a distance of ten or more miles, and whenever there was service held, the people attended from all directions. Rev. Thomas Ritchie was instrumental in its formation, and, from all that can be learned, had the right course been pursued by the denomination, a large Baptist society could have been gathered.

This brings us to the history proper of the Bickleyville Church, the only Baptist organization at present in the county of Monroe. This church came into existence through the labors of Rev. Joseph Currin. Becoming deeply interested in voluntary missionary labor, and in the field up among the hills of Monroe, he finally, in 1842, commenced revival meetings at Craig's Meadows, a small village five miles distant from Stroudsburg. This revival meeting resulted in the conversion of quite a large number—upwards of forty—upon a public profession of faith in Christ—being baptized into the fellowship of the Stroudsburg Baptist Church.

This large increase to our denomination, and in a new locality, and distant from Stroudsburg five miles, soon forced upon the consideration of the forty-three converts a distinct church organization and the erection of a meeting-house. They therefore resolved to call a council of recognition, deciding upon February 15, 1843, as the time, and inviting the Delaware, N. J., Upper Mount Bethel, Pa., Hamburg, N. J., and the church at Stroudsburg to send delegates. At the time named above the council convened, and it being plain that a new church was needed, it was decided to constitute the same—holding the usual religious services and requiring the signing of covenent and the adoption of articles of faith. Upon the same day the new church of forty-three members unanimously called Rev. Joseph Currin to the pastorate, and likewise took steps toward building an edifice the spring following. This purpose was carried out, a substantial and neat stone structure being in a few months dedicated to the worship of God.

Brother Currin was followed by Rev. Edward Barrass, who entered upon his labors in April, 1846. Brother Barrass remained pastor at this time for three years, and after an interval of fourteen years was again called, and for nine and a half years more continued to faithfully serve the church, and was its pastor at the time of his death, September 16, 1869.

The next pastor was Elder Thomas Ritchie, who, though only a few months the under-shepherd, was highly esteemed for his work's sake. He was followed by Rev. Charles Cox, who was called to the pastorate February 2, 1850. He remained with the church but one year, yet there were some who gladly heard the Word and gave their hearts to God.

From February, 1851, for three years the church was without a pastor and the regular preaching of the Word. Good brethren, however, from abroad, from time to time, came into the county, and in this way the church more or less frequently heard the Word. Among them was Rev. Joseph Currin, their first pastor, who returned to renew the old and dear friendships and to encourage the brethren in their work.

In June, 1854, the church extended a call to Rev. Alfred Harris, who remained on the field one year. An effort was at once made to secure a successor, but without success until February, 1858, when Rev. William M. James, a licentiate of the Tenth Baptist Church, Philadelphia, was called to the pastorate—having already been a most acceptable supply during some of the previous winter months. He entered upon the duties of the pastorate the first Sabbath of May, 1858. Brother James resigned the pastorate March 4, 1860, and was succeeded the following May, as has already been stated, by Rev. Edward Barrass. After the death of Brother Barrass the church was supplied for a short time, first by Rev. Alfred Earle and afterwards by Rev. J. C. Butler, their united labors covering about one year.

It is but just to mention likewise the visits of several brethren, as Rev. Joseph L. Barlow, Rev. D. A. Nicols, Rev. B. Wheeler, Rev. W. A. Barnes. Rev. Samuel Seymour, Rev. Jared Peters, of Philadelphia, and Rev. E. A. Francis, the Evangelist.

Especial mention may be made of the labors of Brother Francis, who held a revival meeting for one month, commencing January 5, 1869.

After the retirement of Brother Butler as supply, in April, 1873, the church was again destitute until the centennial year, when Rev. E. A. Francis was called, who served it faithfully for six months.

The church, however, was not forgotten by one good friend, whose praise is in all the churches,—Rev. Levi G. Beck, corresponding secretary of General Baptist Association of Pennsylvania. Again and again has Brother Beck visited the church, preaching for the cause as frequently as a service could be arranged.

Earnest, however, as Brother Beck was in his interest for the church, yet, as has been stated, he failed to place a man upon the field. Thus matters stood until September, 1877, when, in the Providence of God, Rev. William A. Smith took up his residence temporarily at East Stroudsburg. Upon March 10, 1878, the church extended a unanimous call to Brother Smith, which he accepted. The church has now growing power in all the region, and were the means possessed, it would not be long ere Stroudsburg would have a flourishing Baptist Church, and the lost ground in the county would be regained.

The whole number taken into the church since the date when constituted, February 15, 1843, until 1879 is two hundred and fifty-nine.

During Rev. Joseph Currin's labors and pastorate, one hundred and two, including the forty-three constituent members.

Under the two pastorates of Rev. Edward Barrass, thirty-two.

During the pastorate of Rev. William M. James, thirteen.

Under the four pastorates of Rev. Thomas Ritchie, Rev. Charles Cox, Rev. Alfred Harris and Rev. E. A. Francis, thirty.

Since the settlement, March 10, 1878, of Rev. William A. Smith, eighty-two. Total, two hundred and fiifty-nine.

By death and dismissal this was reduced to one hundred and thirty-five.

The membership continued to increase until in 1884 it was reported at one hundred and forty-eight. In April of that year Mr. Smith closed his labors and Rev. D. C. Bixby became pastor May 1st, remaining with the church until the next April. In June, 1885, Rev. Franklin Pierce, the present pastor, accepted a unanimous call to the pastorate. The present membership is one hundred and fifty-two. The trustees are Theodore Hardenstine, Frank Siptroth and Julius Bush.

Poplar Valley Methodist Episcopal Church. — The Methodists held religious meetings in Poplar Valley as early as 1850, but it was not until 1852 that preaching services were conducted in the old stone school-house and maintained for many years after by Rev. M. H. Sisty, W. B. Wood and others. The first class-leaders were Andrew Groner and John Edinger. Under the ministry of Rev. R. Owens, a house of worship was erected in 1859, and services regularly held for many years, during which period the church received large accessions. Under the auspices of Rev. F. H. Gilbert, the present edifice was thoroughly remodeled and beautified, the organization being now in a prosperous condition under the ministry of Rev. William F. Sheppard, its regular pastor. Its officers are Charles Swink, James Hummer, Peter Edinger, Jerome Brewer and William Kress.

Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal Church.—Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal Church is situated in the northwestern section of Stroud township, and at the present time forms part of Sprague ville Circuit. Regular Methodist services first began in this vicinity about the year 1830, in what is known as the old "Fowler's School-House."

As the result of these services, several persons were converted and a society was organized, which became part of Stroudsburg Circuit, and afterward part of Tannersville, and still later of Sprague ville Circuit.

In the fall of the year 1875, under the pastorate of Rev. Ed. L. Martin, an extensive revival took place in the school-house above referred to, during which over forty persons were led to seek religion, most of whom afterwards united with the society.

As the result of this revival, a committee was appointed to consider the expediency of building a church at this place.

The committee reported favorably, whereupon the Quarterly Conference of Sprague ville charge elected a board of trustees to solicit subscriptions of money, and make other arrangements for the erection of the building, consisting of

George Stone, Philip S. Lee, Isaiah Bush, James P. Hoffman, Henry Frantz, Charles L. Hallet and Michael Brish.

Subscriptions amounting to five hundred dollars having been secured, the corner-stone was laid by the Rev. Jeremiah Pastorfield, in October, 1877. The building, which is a one-story frame, twenty-four by thirty-four feet, being completed, was dedicated to the worship of God by Rev. E. L. Martin, on the second Sabbath in June, 1878, who, on account of the altitude of the location, gave it the name of Mount Zion. The ground on which the church stands was given by Mr. Nathan Gardner.

The entire cost of the building was about seven hundred and sixty dollars, all of which was subscribed on or before the day of dedication. Preaching services are held every other Sabbath at three P.M.

A Sunday-school is also held in connection with the church during the summer and fall months of each year, of which Mr. George W. Stone is superintendent.

The following pastors have been appointed to serve the church since its erection: Revs. Frederick Illman, Lewis M. Hobbs and George Mack.

Its present officers are,—Trustees, James P. Hoffman, George W. Stone, Godfrey Mosier, Philip S. Lee, Michael Brish, Henry Frantz and John Mosier; Stewards, James P. Hoffman, P. S. Lee and George W. Stone; Class-Leader, Philip S. Lee; Exhorters, Philip S. Lee and J. P. Hoffman.

The building has recently been repaired and repainted at a cost of one hundred dollars, and is free of debt. Owing to removals and deaths, the present membership of the church is small, numbering about twenty.

Wesley Chapel was built in the year 1865. At a meeting of the trustees, on the 17th of November of this year, measures were taken in reference to building the house of worship. Hiram U. Sebring was preacher in charge. Trustees were George Lame, David Green, George W. Biggs, George M. Shafer, Benjamin Arndt, P. S. Lee and John Ransberry. This church also belonged to Tannersville charge, and was served by the same pastor.

Spragueville Methodist Episcopal Church.—Spragueville Methodist Episcopal Church, a neat, one-story frame, twenty-four by thirty-four feet, situated in the eastern part of Stroud township, was built about the year 1858, under the pastorate of Rev. Reuben Owen, who was then in charge of Tannersville Circuit. For several years prior to the above date religious services were held in a school-house near this place. The ground on which the church stands was given by Mr. William S. White, who at that time owned the tannery at Spragueville. Mr. White also contributed liberally toward the erection of the building, and was also a member of its first board of trustees. The entire cost of the church was about one thousand dollars, all of which was subscribed on or before the day of dedication.

In the spring of 1874 Tannersville Circuit was divided, and Spragueville Circuit was formed, embracing the following appointments, viz.: Spragueville, Oakland, Canadensis, McComas Chapel and Mount Zion.

The following-named pastors have served the church since its erection: Revs. Reuben Owen, J. F. Reynolds, Jacob Todd, D.D., William Matthies, O. W. Landreth, George S. Broadbent, J. C. Gregg, Thomas Kirkpatrick, G. L. Shaffer, J. Pastorfield, E. L. Martin, L. B. Hoffman, John Shields, F. Illman, L. M. Hobbs and George Mack, who is the present preacher in charge of the circuit. Regular preaching services are held in the church every other Sabbath morning and evening, and are well attended. The membership is sixty-one. The Sunday-school connected with the society meets every week at half-past two P.M., and is in a prosperous condition, having one hundred and twenty-five teachers and scholars. Mrs. Hannah M. Mack is the superintendent.

There is a cemetery adjoining the church, in which many who have died in the neighborhood are interred. The parsonage, which stands opposite to the church, was built in the year 1872, under the pastorate of Rev. Jeremiah Pastorfield, at a cost of one thousand eight hundred dollars. Both the church and parsonage buildings are in good condition and free from debt.

The following are the present trustees of church and parsonage property: Frank Van Vliet, Amos Lee, John Dewitt, Frederick Arnold, William Turner, Charles W. Detrick, Shawder Lee, John B. Smiley and Daniel Bush.

CHAPTER XI.

THE BOROUGH OF STROUDSBURG.

THE first purchase of land now embraced in the borough of Stroudsburg was made by Daniel Brodhead, who settled on Analomink Creek, afterward known as Brodhead Creek, in 1738, having the year previously purchased six hundred and forty acres of land, in the centre of which East Stroudsburg is located. Beside the latter borough, the tract included property now owned by Christian Smith and the estate of Robert Brown. He afterward purchased the eastern part of the present borough of Stroudsburg, extending to the location of the present Burnett House, its division line running nearly through its centre. The settlement was known as Dansbury and retained that name until Stroudsburg was founded by Jacob Stroud in 1769. A full review of the Brodhead family will be found in the chapter upon Smithfield.

In 1744 Daniel Brodhead became acquainted with the Moravian missionaries who had established a mission at Shekomeko (Dutchess County, New York), and passed through his settlement en route for their field of labor. He was much impressed with the character of the self-sacrificing Christians and under many trying circumstances and much opposition was their steadfast friend. He built for them a log mission chapel about 1743, the site being at the west end of the present iron bridge crossing the Brodhead Creek. It was the second house of worship north of the mountains, was known as the Dansbury Mission and immediately after its establishment was under the direction of David and Judith Bruce. Ten years later, on the 19th of May, 1753, it was dedicated by Abraham Reincke and in 1755 burned by the Indians and the mission abandoned.

The names of members of this church in 1747 were Daniel and Esther Brodhead, John Baker, John and Catherine Hillman, Joseph and Helen Haines, Edward and Catherine Holly, Francis and Rebecca Jones, William and Mary Clark, John and Hannah McMichael, Daniel Roberts, George and Mary Satathe.

That portion of Stroudsburg west of the Burnett House is described as "a tract of land containing three hundred and ten acres and allowance, situate on the branches of the Analomink creek above the Forks of the Delaware in Bucks County, and returned into the Secretary's for Lynford Lardner, the 17th of March, 1741, a kinsman of John, Thomas and Richard Penn."

This tract was, on the 18th of April, 1760, deeded by Lynford and Elizabeth Lardner to Derrick Van Fleet for the sum of three hundred and ten pounds of lawful money of Pennsylvania. The Van Fleet or Van Vliet family emigrated from Amsterdam, Holland, and settled at Esopus in 1728. They came to Pennsylvania in 1734 and located on land now embraced within the limits of Stroudsburg, where the pioneer of the family resided for forty years. His son Derrick was the purchaser of the land above-mentioned which was later sold at sheriff's sale and purchased by Jacob Stroud.

The Culver family, consisting of Ephraim, the father, Elizabeth, his wife, Ephraim Jr., and four daughters, left Connecticut in 1753, and removing to the present Stroudsburg, settled on a small glebe purchased of Daniel Brodhead. Here he erected upon McMichael Creek, on the site now occupied by William Wallace, a grist-mill, looking forward, no doubt, to years of peaceful industry. This dream was rudely dispelled when, on the 11th of December, 1755, the locality was invaded by savages and prudence became the better part of valor. Assembling his wife and children, they hastily fled and discovered soon after both mill and dwelling in flames. A friendly asylum was found at Nazareth, where they united with the Moravians and Mr. Culver was tendered, in 1756, the position of landlord of the "Crown Inn," at Bethlehem. In 1759 he succeeded to the management of the "Red Rose Inn," situated north of Nazareth, on the road to the Wind Gap. On the day that the Culvers' house and mill were burned many of the dwellings in the valley between the Lehigh and the Delaware were laid in ashes and several of the inhabitants massacred. Numbers fled to the Brodhead settlement at Dansbury (East Stroudsburg), where a united and determined effort was resolved upon to stay the progress of the infuriated savages. The main building was hastily fortified and filled with the wretched and homeless sufferers, such arms as could be procured being placed in the hands of those able to wield them effectually. They were soon attacked by a party of Indians hitherto unresisted in their devastating march down the valley, and numbering about two hundred warriors, who signaled their approach by firing barns, stacks of grain and other material within reach. The attack upon the fortified house was begun on the afternoon of the day named, but the savages were unable long to withstand the well-directed fire from the building and were forced to retire with severe loss. This ended for a time the invasion of that portion of the frontier.

Among the first settlers on the ground covered by the borough of Stroudsburg was Peter La Bar. Three brothers, Peter, Charles and Abraham La Bar, emigrated about 1730, and, landing in Philadelphia, followed the Delaware and settled in Mount Bethel, Northampton (then Bucks) County, where they built a log house and were among the earliest residents at that point. Finally separating, Abraham located above the Water Gap Notch, Peter removed to Stroudsburg, and Charles remained at the original point of settlement. Peter La Bar made his first purchase of the Indians, and subsequently repurchased the land, his log house having stood just north of Hon. S. S. Dreher's office, on the spot upon which Fort Hamilton was later built. George La Bar, one of Peter's sons, married and removed to Mount Bethel. Among his large family of children was George La Bar, Jr., born in 1763, who lived to be one hundred and eleven years of age. He was remarkable for his hostility to the Indians and his absolute fearlessness. The sympathy of the elder La Bar with the Tories involved him in frequent encounters with the representatives of the colonial government. He removed to Ohio in 1808, and having, when ninety-eight years of age, lost his wife, married at the age of one hundred. One authority states his death to have occurred at the age of one hundred and five, and another in his one hundred and twelfth year. It is estimated that the descendants of the three brothers number not less than twenty thousand persons. Fort Hamilton, previously alluded to, was built, in 1756, to afford protection to the settlers during the French and Indian War. It is the present site of the office of Judge Dreher, at the west end of the borough. Fort Penn, at the eastern end of the borough, was located in the rear of the residence of the late William Wintermute, on Main or Elizabeth Street, and was, during the War of the Revolution, in command of Colonel Jacob Stroud. The events connected with these historic spots will be more fully treated of in the general history of this volume. Colonel Stroud is so conspicuous a figure in the incidents connected with the Revolution and the founding of the borough which bears his name, that it seems eminently proper to introduce an extended sketch of him.

THE FOUNDER OF THE TOWN AND HIS FAMILY.—From the record of the proceedings of the English House of Commons we glean that on Wednesday, April 16, 1621, Sir William Stroud moved that "tobacco be banished wholly out of the kingdom, and that it may not be brought in from any part nor used amongst us." This was during the reign of James I., and shows that the knight was even then imbued with the spirit of reform. That he was a favorite with his constituents is proven by the fact that he kept his seat through the stirring days of Charles I. History states that Pym, Hampden, Hollis, Hazelrig and STROUD, all members of the House, bravely resisted this King in his unjust measures. So much the more vehement were they than the others that His Majesty suddenly appeared on January 4, 1642, and, after calling the names of these five men, accused them of treason, and demanded that they should be given up to him. Both Houses of Parliament refused, and the city of London defended them by arms; therefore the King was foiled in this bold stroke to regain former power.

Many descendants of the truly noble man are still to be found in Great Britain; possibly the town of Stroud, in Gloucestershire, contains more than any other part of the realm. Be this as it may, it was in that borough, in the beautiful valley at the confluence of the Frome and Slade, which unite to form the Stroudwater, that Bernard Stroud, the progenitor of the race in this country, first saw the light of day. He came across the Atlantic in the early part of the last century, when but five years old. At a very tender age he lost his parents. He lived during his youth and early manhood near Amwell, Hunterdon County, State of New Jersey.

Although Bernard, or Barnet Stroud, as he was familiarly called, was so young when he left his native land, he always retained pleasing recollections of his home in the old country, where he remembered to have had many influential relations. He talked much of the bright stream upon which the town was situated, and of his mother, who generally wore a scarlet cloak when she took him to walk upon its banks. He said they lived in a large house and had many servants; all of this was, no doubt, the more deeply impressed owing to subsequent privations in America, when left alone and to the tender mercy of strangers.

As he advanced in years he, at different times, contemplated the advisability of returning to England, in search of the descendants of uncles and aunts, who had almost forgotten the scion of their family in the New World. Time went on, and the desire was never accomplished.

Although deprived of his natural guardians, he was kindly cared for by the neighboring farmers. When he grew up he married Keziah Harker, the daughter of one of his protectors. The young couple afterwards moved to Northampton County, State of Pennsylvania, where they purchased a farm and passed the remaining days of their lives. They are both buried at Amwell. They had a large family, nine of whom lived to grow up. The five sons were James, Jacob, Bernard, Samuel and one who was killed in battle when scarcely of age, name unknown, but believed to be John. Of the four daughters, Jemima married Aaron Depui; Jane, Enoch Anderson; while Keziah and Deborah remained single.

James went to Virginia and left many children; Jacob was the founder of Stroudsburg, Monroe County (of him more will be said hereafter); and Samuel, the youngest child, went to Kentucky when it was first settled. His progeny is numerous.

Jacob Stroud was born January the 15th, 1735, at his father's home in New Jersey. While still a boy he was placed with Nicholas Depui, the proprietor of a large and valuable landed estate at Shawnee, on the river Delaware, near the Water Gap, to learn farming.

Soon after becoming of age, the French and Indian War having begun, he enlisted for five years in the English service. Three of his brothers also entered the provincial army for a like period, Samuel being the only one who did not try a soldier's life.

The Strouds were accustomed to arrange a place for meeting after each battle. Jacob used to relate that after a severe engagement he went, as usual, to the rendezvous, when but two brothers met him, and how in the clear moonlight they sadly sought and found the missing one among the slain.

In August, 1757, Jacob Stroud formed one of the garrison at Fort William Henry, on Lake George. The French had already made three determined but unsuccessful attacks, and their general, the Marquis de Montcalm, resolved to make a fourth attempt. He sent Colonel Monro, the commander of the fort, a demand for a surrender, setting before him the hopelessness of endeavoring to hold out any longer. This was refused by Monro, who knew General Webb was only thirty miles away with four thousand men to reinforce his three thousand. He, therefore, waited for six days for help, which never came. Forced to capitulate, he stipulated that they should be guarded from any attack of the savages, and was faithfully promised such should be the case. Notwithstanding this, many Indians, under the English, and a portion of soldiers were given the savage allies of the French to butcher. They were immediately set upon. Jacob Stroud and a few comrades, by dexterous dodging and swiftness in running, made good their escape.

Col. Stroud, in referring to this event, strongly condemned Webb's indolence and cowardice, praised Monro unboundedly, while for Montcalm he expressed the greatest contempt, considering him guilty of base perfidy.

The taking of Quebec, September 13, 1759, was the most important event of the war. Here again we find Jacob Stroud was at his post when they scaled the Heights of Abraham and landed on the plains above.

The glorious success of this daring attack is so well known that it is needless to enter into details, save to state the fact that Jacob Stroud, John Fish and Matthias Hutchinson were nearest Wolfe when he fell, and carried him behind the rocks, where he expired, after uttering his last words of joy upon being told the enemy fled.

The war was thus in reality ended, and the three years or more left of the term of enlistment was spent without fighting.

When free to return to private life, he went back to the home of his boyhood, and in less than three months, April 6, 1761, married Elizabeth Macdowel. His bride was not quite eighteen, and was a daughter of John and Hannah Depui Macdowel.

Nicholas Depui, grandfather of Elizabeth Stroud, was a Huguenot who fled to Holland in 1685, when Louis XIV. revoked the Edict of Nantes. He had in his youthful days been a Roman Catholic priest, and so much was he desired in the church, that the Pope offered him a cardinal's hat if he would remain. This fact probably made it the more important for him to leave the country when the Protestants were no longer protected. In the Netherlands he married Winifred Rose, and after the lapse of more than twenty years he brought his family to America. On board the ship in which they crossed the Atlantic they made the acquaintance of John and Jane Macdowel, a brother and sister, aged respectively eighteen and twenty.

These young people were from the north of Ireland. They had been persuaded by an uncle to come to this country, owing to unhappiness at home caused by their father's second marriage. Many months were spent in determining whether to accept the offer and in making the transit over the ocean, so that on landing they found the uncle married, and were not as warmly welcomed as expected. Feeling this keenly, they eventually agreed to form one household with the Depuis. After living a short time at Esopus, in New York State, they all permanently settled in Northampton County, Pa., in the year 1725. In due time two children of Nicholas Depui married the two Macdowels, and one of these couples became the parents of Elizabeth Stroud.

At the time of his marriage Jacob Stroud was in very moderate circumstances, and for the next two years was engaged in transporting government supplies to Fort Pitt, near Pittsburgh. This employment, proving not at all lucrative, was abandoned. He then entered into a contract with Abel James, a prominent Philadelphian, to carry provisions through the unsettled region north of Stroudsburg to Shohola, a settlement on the Delaware.

Thus, for a while, he drifted away from the farm-life to which he had been reared. His employer, however, soon loaned him the money to purchase three hundred acres of land, which he paid for in installments. This tract was about three miles from what is now Stroudsburg, and upon it was a grist-mill, a dwelling-house and stable. From henceforth success attended every venture, though he was in no sense of the word a land speculator, for he seldom sold or wished to sell, but he steadily and rapidly acquired considerable property. Mr. Brodhead, in his volume entitled "The Delaware Water Gap," says that at his death he owned four thousand acres. This must refer to the immediate neighborhood of Stroudsburg, for the record of deeds at Easton shows very many large conveyances to him; but two passed out of his family before his decease. It had been his custom to give each child a farm at his or her marriage, and of his eight daughters and three sons, all but two married during their father's lifetime, so that nine tracts of land were held in the name of his offspring, though they were virtually a part of his estate. On the 8th of July, 1776, Jacob Stroud was elected a member of the convention to form the first Constitution of Pennsylvania, which indicated that he was a decided Whig from the beginning, as this was only four days after the signing of the Declaration of Independence. He attended the first meeting, July 15, 1776, held at Carpenter's Hall, Philadelphia. The Constitution which they formed was adopted September 28, 1776.

During the Revolution Colonel Stroud was stationed as commanding officer at Fort Penn, the remnants of which stood on the hill at the lower end of the town of Stroudsburg, until the great freshet of 1862 carried it away. It was not likely that he saw much, if any, active service during the war, but he was performing his duty and on guard should there be any attack. After the massacre at Wyoming many of the escaped sought refuge at Fort Penn, and were faithfully and kindly provided for by the commander. It was doubtless trying to one so used to the battle-field to remain passive; but "They also serve who only stand and wait."

The war for independence ceased after the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, October 19, 1781, and almost immediately Jacob Stroud was sent by the county as a representative to the House, where he served for three years. This was before Great Britain acknowledged our freedom, which was not till September 3, 1783. His name appears regularly in the yeas and nays, which were called frequently, as there were many weighty matters to settle. In his legislative career, as in everything which he undertook, he showed much exemplary punctuality and diligence.

As a middle-aged man Jacob Stroud occupied, as a residence, old Fort Penn. A half-mile distant, and some twenty years older, was Fort Hamilton, near which was erected, in 1795, a large, roomy stone mansion for John Stroud, eldest son of Colonel Jacob, and between the two was placed a frame dwelling, which stood in what is now the centre of the town, nearly opposite the present Burnett House. These formed a nucleus for building, and gradually a flourishing settlement appeared, and the town of Stroudsburg was founded.

Jacob Stroud was of medium height, rather under than over size, of light complexion, clear blue eyes, fair hair, with decided features. It was his habit to rise at four on week-days, and personally superintend his various enterprises. Within a stone's throw of his house were his large grist-mill, saw-mill, blacksmith shop and store. The grounds which he cultivated formed a circuit of several miles, and it was impossible for him to get from one to the other on foot; therefore his time was mainly spent in the saddle. He owned the best and fastest horses in the country, a list of all these animals, in his own handwriting, being still in existence. He used to often mount his favorite pacer, "Black Jacket," and ride to Easton, twenty-seven miles distant, in time to breakfast with his son Daniel at that point. His literary education was only such as a country school could give. He wrote a good hand, and was a natural mathematician, very ready with mental work; he also possessed a wonderful memory concerning everything connected with figures, and this, in several instances, has been noticed in his descendants, a daughter, grandson, granddaughter and great-granddaughter all evincing the same faculty.

He was decidedly social, very free and easy in manner and quick at repartee. At one of the early elections he was accosted on the ground with "Don't you think, colonel, one man is as good as another." "Yes," was the ready response, "and a great deal better."

It was, of course, necessary for him to employ many laborers. He also owned several slaves, who lived in his family after freedom, and were always loyal to "Ole Massa." With all of these he required prompt obedience and punctuality. It is related that he once noticed a door which had been carelessly left standing open; he inquired who had been there last, and upon being told the man, with the additional information that said person was then working in a field a mile distant, he replied, "Send him to me at once." When the transgressor appeared with the question "Did you want me, colonel?" he was silenced by "Yes; close that door!" The rebuke was understood, and no further comment needed. All orders were given in few words, but they were imperative.

He much disliked intoxicating drinks, and always abstained from them. His health was good, and he would probably have lived to a great age had not a chaise, in which he was riding, accidentally overturned, thereby throwing him with such violence against the stump of a tree as to cause a serious injury to the liver. A settled jaundice followed, which produced his death on the 14th of July, 1806, at the age of seventy-one and a half years. His wife survived him nearly five years. She died May 5, 1811. As her tombstone avers, "she was one of the best and most exemplary of women." Her husband considered her judgment remarkably good, and always consulted her in every new undertaking. He used to say that the greatest mistake he ever made was in not marrying sooner. They are buried together in the burying-ground which Colonel Stroud presented to the town. The same slab records the virtues of both. We copy the one most interesting to the public,—

"Here lies the body of
the original proprietor of Stroudsburgh, who was born January 15th, 1735,

at Amwell, New Jersey, and died at this place July 14th, 1806,
Aged 71 years, 5 months and 25 days.
He was a member of the Legislature of Pennsylvania during the dangerous times of the Revolution, also one of the Convention which formed the first Constitution of the State, and in this part of the country one of the most useful men of his day."

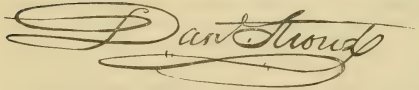
This was erected in accordance with the feelings of his son Daniel, who had previously become an ardent admirer of the Society of Friends; consequently all mention of military service or title connected therewith has been studiously avoided. Although Colonel Jacob did not embrace the sectarian views of this son in other things, in his old age he became an advocate of peace and particularly requested that his descendants should take no part in warfare.



Jacob and Elizabeth Stroud had eleven children who grew to mature years. The two oldest were daughters named Hannah and Jane; the former married John Starbird. She was the one who inherited her father's remarkable memory. She could name the birthdays of all her young friends, and when quite aged could instantly recall just how many pounds of butter had been sold from her dairy in any one particular year, give the name of the purchaser and price paid. So it was with every passing event of her life; nothing seemed forgotten. As a young, unmarried woman she was very helpful to her father, assisted him in his store and made frequent trips with her little brothers, John and Daniel, aged respectively twelve and eight, to buy goods in Philadelphia. The roads through which they passed were rough, the forests unbroken and frequented by Indians. Many streams without bridges required fording and this quite late at night, for the inns were few and at great distances apart. Jane, the second child, married John Bush and removed to the lake country of New York State. John Stroud, the oldest son, married Elizabeth Depui, his second cousin. Sarah married Dr. James Hollinshead. Daniel Stroud married, first, Elizabeth (commonly called Eliza), daughter of William and Susanna Shoemaker, of Cheltenham, Montgomery County, Penna.; second, Mary, daughter of Jacob and Mary Paul. He was left by his father's will the then unsold land of Stroudsburg and, as at that time the village consisted of but five houses, he is so closely identified with the place that more will be said of him hereafter. Rachel married Samuel Rees; Ann married Dr. Peter Hollinshead, a brother of her sister's husband; Jemima married Edward Burson; Deborah married James Burson. The husbands of these two were first cousins. Elizabeth married the Rev. William Colbert. Jacob, the youngest child, died soon after becoming of age, and was unmarried. All, with the exception of Jacob, left large families and are the ancestors of so many people that it is impossible to designate them in this volume.

Daniel Stroud was born, as the record states, at Fort Penn, on the 22d of May, 1772. At nine years of age he was put under the care of Parson Hanna, a Presbyterian divine, who resided near Nazareth, Pa. Here he was given a classical education. While still but a youth he was placed in the law-office of Jared Ingersoll, of Philadelphia, and, when scarcely of age, was admitted to the bar. At twenty he was united in marriage with Elizabeth Shoemaker, a girlish beauty of eighteen. For the first year or two they lived at Easton, Pa., where Daniel made for himself a name in his profession. In 1797 they came into possession, and moved into the house originally built for John Stroud, at Fort Penn (now Stroudsburg), John removing to a farm some miles distant. This was done at the request of their father, who felt that as he increased in years, and business was more of a burden, he should like his lawyer-son near him. The same year Daniel Stroud was appointed by Governor Mifflin to the military office of aide-de-camp to Major-General Thomas Craig, Eighth Division Pennsylvania Militia. This was resigned May 18, 1804, when he contemplated joining the Society of Friends. His change in religious views—for he had been brought up a Presbyterian—was a blight to all worldly prospects, as his path from henceforth was an exceedingly narrow one. His father was much displeased that the son upon whom his hopes were placed should so ruthlessly, as he considered, fling every honor away.

Hitherto the house of Daniel and Eliza Stroud had been the scene of many a merry dance, and especially was this the case when their intimate friends from the city paid them brief visits in the summer season. In the long twilights Daniel had been wont to play upon the violin, while his wife accompanied him with some gay or mournful ditty, as best suited the varying mood of the young couple. But now these friends of fashion were forsaken, the home dismantled of every needless ornament, the violin and trivial books committed to the flames. The silver-mounted soldierly weapons were safely stowed away in the garret, lest they might contaminate the rising generation. The pair were thoroughly in earnest and hesitated not to do their Master's bidding, though at the loss of so much that the world would count important. Daniel found it laid upon him to retrench his business in many ways. A large distillery that was very profitable was abandoned. The law had to be given up, as he felt it impossible to have anything to do with administering oaths. In one instance a valuable piece of land was sacrificed, because he could not feel it right to summon witnesses who would be obliged to swear in his behalf.

In those days it was the custom to furnish harvest hands a portion of whiskey with the midday meal; this, Daniel Stroud felt he could no longer conscientiously do, even though it should be at great pecuniary loss to refuse, for he knew that it was more than likely that nobody would work for him. Not wishing to deceive the men, he told them his resolution and promised each one twelve cents per day additional wages as a compensation. Contrary to all expectation, he had no difficulty in finding hands willing to work upon these terms. The extra pay was dubbed by the harvesters as "Daniel's sober money."

As has been previously stated, Daniel Stroud was left by his father the unsold town-lots of Stroudsburg. It was he who laid out the broad, well-shaded streets, and in every instance the deed of sale required the prospective building to be placed at least thirty feet back from the sidewalk. Although so strict in carrying out his own convictions, Daniel Stroud was not at all bigoted. He desired that all denominations should have their proper place in the borough, and as the people were mainly Presbyterians and Methodists, he donated both sects land in the town upon which to erect meeting-houses. The buildings duly placed thereon have, however, long since been sold, together with lots upon which they were situated, and the money thus acquired used toward putting more imposing churches on other sites.

This branch of the Stroud family were the first Friends in the place, but soon others moved into the neighborhood and, in course of time, the society was given two tracts of land, one for a meeting-house, the other for a burying-ground. The next gift, on behalf of the people, was a lot for an academy.

Daniel Stroud had a large, open, generous heart and desired to benefit in every way possible the community in which he lived. Although conscience prevented the following of his avocation as a lawyer, in all particulars he, nevertheless, willingly, wrote wills or executed deeds for his neighbors, and this without any compensation whatever. He entertained largely and "his great fires up the chimney roar'd, while the stranger feasted at his board." As the taverns were very poor, it was his custom to invite to his own house every traveler he found in one of them whom he judged was accustomed to better accommodations. Many persons who had heard of his liberality would drive first to his door to inquire for the best place of entertainment in the village, knowing well that he would extend his hospitality to them. Thus it was, that there were very few days in the year when his home was without at least one visitor. Such magnanimous acts, together with his natural intelligence and urbane, though sincere, manner, gave him much influence among the men of his time.

Daniel Stroud's wife, Eliza, died October 29, 1809. She was the mother of twelve children, eight of whom survived her and reached mature years. Of her, it may be truly said, "None knew thee but to love thee. None named thee but to praise."

In July, 1811, Daniel Stroud married Mary, the daughter of Jacob and Mary Paul. This union was equally happy, and what more can be said of one called upon to fill so trying a position as the care of six noisy boys and two little girls of eight and three entailed, than that she was a true mother to them in every respect, and gained the warm affection of all?

There are few, very few, now in the borough who remember the tall figure of Daniel Stroud, as he daily walked the streets, invariably accompanied by one, or perhaps two, of his sons. He had a fair complexion, with a high forehead, overshadowing clear blue eyes. His hair was somewhat sandy and remarkably thin; nose and mouth regular. He was a man of much strength of character and great originality, inheriting his father's knack of making pithy remarks. Many of his sayings are still quoted by the older people of the place.

He died of an acute attack of pneumonia March 2, 1846, aged nearly seventy-four years. His wife survived him eight years.

The oldest child of Daniel and Eliza Stroud was named Charles; he married Susan, daughter of David and Lydia Burson, of Springfield, Bucks County, Pa. He spent most of his days in the State of Ohio, and was a good, consistent and respected member of the Society of Friends during a long life.

Macdowel Stroud (name upon reaching maturity changed to George Macdowel) was the second son.

George M. Stroud, son of Daniel and Eliza Shoemaker Stroud, was born at Stroudsburg, Northampton County (now Monroe), October 12, 1795. He was strong, active and affectionate.

As an exemplification of these qualities, it is related that having been sent for, with his brother Charles, to return home from boarding-school to see their mother in her last illness, on arriving at home, he rushed into her arms, and soon after performed the following exploit: The housekeeper had neglected to send early in the morning to Nazareth, twenty-two miles distant, for an article of nourishment which was thought necessary to prolong her life. George mounted a horse and set out at noon, obtained the article and returned at midnight, when it was so dark he could not see a bridge, and the horse walked through a creek. It thus appears that he rode forty-four miles in twelve hours. Of this, those who loved him were justly proud, as he was then only fourteen years of age.

Some time after the death of his mother he went to Philadelphia and studied Latin. He made good progress; but being accustomed to a free life in the country, his health suffered, and he went home, and worked two years on his father's farm. Having regained health, he entered at Princeton College, passed through with credit and graduated with honor in the summer of 1817. The autumn of the same year he entered the office of Judge Hallowell as a student, and was admitted to practice June 28, 1819. Besides attending to practice, he compiled and published "A Sketch of the Laws relating to Slavery in the several States of the United States of America," in which he shows the great inequality of the punishments enacted for the same offenses on whites and colored people, and that slaves are not protected from very cruel punishments at the hands of their owners. This state of things has now happily passed away.

In early manhood he was converted, and thereafter he made the laws and precepts of the Gospel the rules of his life. Having been brought up in the Society of Friends, who do not practice outward baptism, he believed baptism by immersion was Scriptural; he was accordingly immersed in the baptistery of the Sansom Street Church; but preferring, on other accounts, the Episcopal Church, was received into membership and continued in it until his death. In the summer of 1828 he married V. Eleanor, daughter of Judge Hallowell, who survives him.

In the spring of 1835 he was appointed by Governor Wolf a judge of the District Court of Pennsylvania for a term of ten years. After the expiration of his term of service he returned to the bar and resumed practice, in which he continued six years. On the 1st day of December, 1851 (the Constitution having been altered, making the office elective) he was chosen to the position he had formerly filled, and was successively elected at each recurring period until, in view of approaching age, in 1871, he declined renomination, having filled the position for thirty years.

David Paul Brown, Esq., in his book entitled "The Forum," thus expresses his opinion of Judge Stroud: "It is now our agreeable duty to direct attention to a faint outline of one who, for rectitude of purpose, unquestioned competency and an industry that never flags, has no superior and but few equals in the judicial history of the State."

Soon after his retirement from the bench (on account of the failing health of his father-in-law, Judge Hallowell), Judge Stroud removed, with his family, to the residence of the former, nearly opposite to Girard College. From thence he daily walked to court, making it a rule to arrive there fifteen minutes before the time of commencing business, and in the afternoon rode on horseback, which exercise in the fresh air had a great influence in preserving his health.

In 1871, shortly before his retirement from the bench, he removed with his family to Germantown. There he spent his time among his family, his friends and his books. His strength gradually declined, and, with a peaceful trust in the promises of God, he very quietly departed June 29, 1875, in the eightieth year of his age.

William Stroud, the third son, married Mary Paul, the daughter of Morris and Tacy Robeson. He died of typhoid fever while still a young man, leaving his widow with two small sons. Of him it has been said that "he had a disposition frank, sprightly and generous, a mind prompt, acute, energetic and capacious. He acquired the respect and regard of all who knew him, and became a cherished object in the affection of his near relatives."

Jacob D. Stroud, fourth son, also died in his prime of a like fever. He was a tall, fine-looking man, and had undoubtedly inherited the rare business qualifications of the grandfather, whose name he bore. He married Mary N., the daughter of Joseph and Rebecca Richardson. They had four children, who were all quite small at the time of their father's death.

James H. Stroud, the fifth son, remained single and lived and, at an advanced age, died in the house in which he was born, in Stroudsburg. "He held at different times most of the various offices in the borough, was for six years the county prothonotary, and for many years a more than ordinarily popular justice of the peace. In this latter connection, it has been said of him that he settled many contentions and disputes by his wise arbitrations and friendly and prudent counsels, and often restored friendship and good feeling among neighbors who, under other circumstances, would have become life-long and bitter enemies. He was the first cashier of the Stroudsburg Bank, and held the position about ten years. He was a man of few words, but strong in his feelings and attachments, and unselfish and faithful friendship." He was especially noticeable for dry humor.

Samuel H. Stroud, the sixth son, perished by drowning, in a spot grown up with grass, when two years old, in attempting to go to his father, who was with the hay-makers, a short distance from the house.

Susan Stroud, the first daughter who survived infancy, lived with her bachelor brother, James, in the old mansion until his decease, when she removed to a married sister's residence, in Rahway, N. J., where her death occurred the following year. Many of the present inhabitants remember this unassuming, noble woman. She possessed a kind, sympathetic heart, united with a mind of more than ordinary ability, and, above all, was a consistent, lowly Christian and a member of the Society of Friends. The poor and needy, the despised and the forsaken found in her an ever-willing listener and helper.

Simpson Stroud, the eighth son, married Tacy Ann Robeson, sister of his brother William's wife. He died, in early manhood, of the scarlet fever, leaving a widow and three children. Possessing mental attainments of the highest order, he was in every sense of the word a truly gifted and pious man. He joined the Methodists and was a minister in that religious sect.

Elizabeth, the third daughter, married Joseph P. Robeson, brother of her sister-in-law, who bore that maiden-name. She is the only surviving child of Daniel and Eliza Stroud, and has led an active and useful life. Her memory, for which she has always been noted, is still good. Having once heard a circumstance or date, it seems to be implanted in her mind forever. She has been of great service in furnishing matter for this review of the family. She is at present living in Chester Valley, Pa., with a single daughter, her other children having married and formed homes of their own.

Martha Stroud, the only child of Daniel and Mary Stroud, married Jacob R. Shotwell, of Rahway, N. J., where she and her husband now reside. She is an exemplary woman, whose marked unselfishness in every act and word is an example to the younger generations.

Of the ten children of Daniel Stroud, six have become parents and grandparents and two great-grandparents, so that there are three generations now living not separately designated in this sketch. They are scattered all over the United States, from the stormy Atlantic, ever dashing its waves on a much-worn coast, to the more gentle Pacific.

INCORPORATION.—The village of Stroudsburg was incorporated as a borough by an act of the Legislature approved February 6, 1815. By this act the provisions of an enactment passed March 28, 1814, incorporating the borough of Mercer, were applied to Stroudsburg, as will appear in the following copy of the law:

"An ACT to erect the town of Stroudsburg, in Northampton county, into a borough.

"SECT. 1. BE it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after the passing of this act, the town of Stroudsburg, in Northampton county, including the lots and lands attached to said town, and belonging thereunto, shall be, and the same is hereby erected into a borough, which shall be called 'The Borough of Stroudsburg;' bounded and limited as follows, viz.: Beginning at the junction of Sambo creek with Broadhead's creek, thence down the east margin of Broadhead's creek to its junction with McMichael's creek; thence up said McMichael's creek, along the south side thereof, to its junction with Pokono creek; thence up said Pokono creek, along the west side thereof, to its junction with Big Meadow run; and from thence to the place of beginning. And it shall and may be lawful for the persons residing within the borough of Stroudsburg, to exercise and enjoy similar rights and privileges, and at the same times, and under similar rules and regulations, and subject to the same fines and forfeitures, and shall and may elect and appoint similar borough officers, which said borough officers and inhabitants shall exercise similar and equal powers and authorities, and be in all things governed by similar rules and regulations, as are granted to and provided for the inhabitants and borough officers of the borough of Mercer, in the county of Mercer, by an act of assembly, passed the twenty-eighth day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and fourteen, entitled 'An act to erect the town of Mercer, in the county of Mercer, into a borough:' Provided, That the election for officers of the said borough, shall be holden at the academy in the same, and that the duties directed to be performed by the constable of Mercer township, in the law to which this refers, shall be performed by the constable of Lower Smithfield township for the time being."

There is nothing in the records to show that this act was operative, and it was certainly not continuously; but a regular borough government appears to have been organized when the county was erected, and maintained from that time to the present, though the names of officers

SCHOOLS.—The earliest school in the vicinity of the borough of Stroudsburg was located on Keever's Hill, in Stroud township, on the public road leading from Stroudsburg to the Wind Gap. The citizens instrumental in building this school-house were Daniel Stroud, John Stroud, Mr. Hollinshead and a few others whose names are not recollected. It was a log structure, built after the model of the log houses of those days. Only the ordinary English branches were taught, the first teacher being a Mr. Curtis. The school was organized prior to the year 1800, and removed about that date to a stone building in the borough of Stroudsburg, situated on the present Green Street, on a lot adjoining the Friends' Meeting-house. The first teachers in the borough were Nathaniel and Mary Waters. Other teachers were a Mr. Gummere, brother of the author of a work on surveying; his brother-in-law, Mr. William McVaugh, Dr. Herring, Mr. Hubbard and Miss Alice Welding. An act was passed by the State Legislature on the 28th day of March, 1814, "incorporating the Stroudsburg Academy, in the village of Stroudsburg, in the county of Northampton." The act declared "that there shall be and is hereby established, in the village of Stroudsburg, in the county of Northampton, an academy, or public school, for the education of youth in the useful arts, sciences and literature, by the name and style of the Stroudsburg Academy; that the first trustees of said academy shall consist of the following persons: Daniel Stroud, Samuel Rees, Jacob Postens, Jacob Brown, William Van Buskirk, William D. Walton, Asa Herring, John Allabach and James Hollinshead; that the said trustees are empowered to erect such buildings and make such improvements as may be found necessary for said institution, and generally to perform all matters which shall be for the well-being of the said academy and the management; that they shall have the power to make and erect ordinances for the government of said academy, and the electing and appointing a master and tutors, of agreeing with them for their salaries and of removing them; and that when the building shall have been completed and the salaries of the masters and tutors arranged, in case any funds shall be left above what is necessary to keep the building in repair, they shall expend the same in the purchase of books, charts, maps, globes and philosophical apparatus for the use of said academy."

The same year in which the charter was granted Daniel Stroud started a subscription for the purpose of raising funds for the purchase of a lot and the erection of a building for a public school. In this paper Daniel Stroud donates a lot for the purpose valued at one hundred dollars, and the following persons contributed in various sums: James Hollinshead, Samuel Rees, Jacob Brown, William Van Buskirk, Asa Herring, Jacob Postens, James Burson, George Dreher, Samuel Drake, Burris Mantonya, William Gordon, Daniel Koontz, John Allenbach, Peter Allenbach, George Waters, Philip Shafer, William D. Walton, William Wills and William Huston. After the foregoing subscription had been received, and finding the funds inadequate to defray the expense of the building contemplated, a subscription was drawn by Peter Hollinshead. This petition sets forth "the purpose of building a house of worship in the village of Stroudsburg, on a lot already given for the purpose of an academy, providing the consent of the trustees of said lot can be obtained; otherwise to be put on such other lot as can be procured in said village that shall appear to the trustees of said house of public worship eligible for the purpose. It is considered at the time of making this substitution that the use of said house of public worship shall be divided among those religious societies whose members have contributed towards its erection." The following are the names of contributors: Peter Hollinshead, Asa Herring, George Waters, Samuel Pugh, Samuel Drake, Jr., Daniel Stroud, J. Hollinshead, Michael Brown, Hugh Pugh, Daniel Ashton, Francis Drake, Thomas Smiley, William D. Clayton, Samuel Rees, Peter Allenbach, William Colbert, Jacob Brown, Henry Ransberry, John and Michael Ransberry, John Wolf, John Brodhead, Jane Brodhead, John Brown, Jr., Robert Russell, John Huston and William Torbert. The trustees accordingly, in 1816, erected a stone building two stories high on the present Green Street, near the corner of Main and Elizabeth Streets, the State appropriating four hundred dollars for the purpose. It was used on the Sabbath by the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist congregations until they secured other places of worship.

It is not possible to procure a complete list of the instructors at the academy. At a meeting of the board of trustees held March 19, 1828, it was announced that the services of Joseph Shepherd, of Bucks County, had been secured as teacher. At a later date were Rev. Frederick Knighton, Ira B. Newman and Rev. J. B. Hyndshaw. The pronounced abolition sentiments of Mr. Newman made his presence obnoxious to many citizens and occasioned his dismissal by the trustees. He, in 1839, brought a suit against them, which was decided adversely to him.

This property was finally sold at sheriff's sale, and conveyed by John Kern, sheriff of Northampton County, on the 27th of April, 1829, to Daniel Stroud, William Van Buskirk and James Postens. Messrs. Postens and Van Buskirk subsequently conveyed their shares to the Stroudsburg French Seminary, and the heirs of Daniel Stroud, at a later date, executed a release of the remaining third to the same corporation. The act of the State Legislature incorporating the "Stroudsburg French Seminary" was passed on the 4th of March, 1839, the following persons being named as trustees: John Huston, Joseph Kerr, Samuel Stokes, William P. Vail, Morris D. Robeson, Robert Boys and Depue S. Miller. The building was used for educational purposes until 1882, when it became unfit for occupation and was sold at public sale, the purchaser agreeing to remove it within sixty days. Under the provisions of the act authorizing the building of county academies, the edifice now commonly spoken of as the "old academy" was erected, an act of Legislature dated March 27, 1839, having been passed granting a State appropriation of two thousand dollars, for the purpose. A dispute as to the part of the borough in which the building should be located was turned to good advantage. Some of the citizens were in favor of a site on the hill north of the borough, while others favored the level tract at the base of this elevation. A vote for trustees was taken, each voter paying the sum of five dollars. The interest in the matter was so great as to induce many citizens of means to pay the price of the vote of their poorer neighbors, the funds thus raised being devoted to the furnishing of the building. The site on the hill was finally chosen and the locality has since been known as Academy Hill. Four borough schools were also opened at a later date,—one being located on Ann Street, between Centre and Green Streets, now converted into a dwelling; another on the corner of Walnut and Analomink Streets, opposite the burial-ground, which was demolished in 1886; a third at the west end of the borough, on Pocono Street, which has recently been converted into a dwelling; and the fourth, east of the present academy, also occupied as a dwelling. The latter building was for years devoted to the education of colored children. Among the early teachers at the academy were Messrs. Miller, Samuel Rees, James Carr, Lewis D. Vail, David S. Lee and Stephen Holmes. An additional room was built in connection with the academy, which was used as a secondary school. A system of grading had been introduced some years before, which was materially improved on the accession of Mr. B. Morey to the principalship, in 1871.

A new school building, occupying a commanding situation on an eminence overlooking the borough, was begun in the fall of 1883, and completed the following year, the people voting by an overwhelming majority to increase the school indebtedness in order to complete the building. The total cost of site, building, furniture and heating apparatus slightly exceeded sixteen thousand dollars. It contains eight rooms, four on each floor, and is so arranged that two of the upper rooms may be thrown into one for special occasions. Seven of these apartments are now occupied; the number of pupils at present in attendance is three hundred and ninety-four. In the High School, besides the common branches, are taught algebra, geometry, natural philosophy, ancient history, Latin and physical geography.

The teachers are John E. Shull, principal; William H. Ramsey, J. A. Clements, Miss Ella Shafer, Miss Sallie Detrick, Miss Jennie Drake, Miss Lillie Bittenbender. The present board of school directors are Rev. F. Knighton, D.D., president; N. C. Miller, M.D., secretary; Robert Gruver, treasurer; Garrett Ramsey, B. S. Jacoby, A. B. Shafer.

Early Merchants.—Doubtless the earliest merchant in Stroudsburg was Jacob Stroud, who resided at the time at Fort Penn, or, more strictly speaking, in a dwelling standing just in front of the site of Fort Penn. It is presumed that the store was conveniently located, as his children often rendered him assistance at the counter. A ledger used by him between the years 1784 and 1789 is still in existence. The following names are among many that appear as having running accounts with him: Adam Smith, David Shoemaker, John Vought, Isaac Van Norman, John Transue, Simon Keller, David Cartright, Thomas Bush, John Van Dermark, Benjamin Schoonover, Aaron Depui, Robert McDowel, Prince Alden, Samuel Van Camp, John Fish, Frederick Everhart, John Starbird, Mordecai Morgan, William Wills, Black Abraham Knuce, Jacob Kline, William Walton, Daniel La Bar, Samuel Vandermark, Garret Brodhead, Jacob Transue, Samuel Rees, Nicholas Depui, Henry Drinker, Charrick Rosenkrans, James Dingman, Christian Eilenberg and James Bartron.

It is probable that for a long period Colonel Stroud controlled the trade in the immediate vicinity of Stroudsburg. Early during the present century John Witchel, an English Quaker, and his wife began a general mercantile business in a yellow painted house standing where the American Hotel is located. They also erected and occupied a dwelling on the site of the present Indian Queen Hotel. Mr. Witchel not finding his business sufficiently lucrative, sold his goods and returned with his family to England.

Samuel Brooks, at nearly the same period, conducted business on the site of Colonel Stroud's tavern, and was also the postmaster of the place.

Stogdell Stokes made his advent as a merchant in 1816, on ground now occupied by the Delaware and Lackawanna express office, became a leading, influential citizen of Stroudsburg, was identified with its most important interests and elected associate judge of the county. He now resides with his daughter at Moorestown, N. J. In 1821 Samuel Brooks sold his business to William Stroud, removing meanwhile to Craig's

Meadows, in Smithfield. Mr. Stroud built a brown stone house on the site now occupied by Judge S. S. Dreher's office and held the commission as postmaster until his death. He also erected the residence now occupied by Judge Dreher in 1822. He was succeeded by Joseph V. and Charles R. Wilson, who were for many years leading merchants of the place. William Stroud was followed by Michael H. Dreher as postmaster, his office being on ground now occupied by the First National Bank.

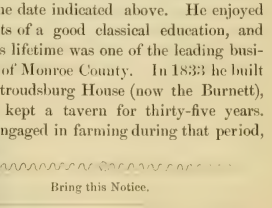
John Boys opened a store opposite the present Washington Hotel, on Elizabeth Street, the same location having been occupied by James Burson at an early day. Michael H. Dreher conducted a store on the site now occupied by George Brown, on Elizabeth Street.

John Malvin came to Stroudsburg in 1838 and first occupied a portion of the Stroud mansion as a store. He later transferred his quarters to the house now the residence of Robert R. De Puy. George H. Miller built a store on the site now occupied by R. J. Quackenbush. Robert Huston came to Stroudsburg in 1841 as clerk for John Boys, and subsequently built the store on Elizabeth Street he at present occupies. Charles Marsh was by trade a cabinet-maker. He erected the dwelling near the home of A. A. Dinsmore, Esq. Charles R. Andre, who has just removed to Mount Pocono, is one of the oldest merchants in the county. Nicholas Ruster, though not among the earliest, has for years been a prominent and respected merchant in the borough. He married Mrs. Sarah E., widow of William Angle, and had two sons—Jacob and William. Mr. Ruster, after a brief career as a merchant at Craig's Meadows, removed, in 1858, to Stroudsburg. His father, Jacob Ruster, who was born in Olsbruchen, province of Reinfeld, Germany, November 3, 1801, with his wife and five children, emigrated to America in 1853, and settled in Smithfield township, Monroe County, where he still resides. Two of his children had preceded him to this country. The family are among the most industrious and highly esteemed in the county. Other business men of the borough have been identified for many years with its progress, but may not with propriety be classed among its early merchants.

Stroud J. Hollinshead.—The Hollinshead family is one of the original families of the United States, and has been represented in this country since the opening of the eighteenth century.

Daniel Hollinshead, the first ancestor, was born in Leicestershire, England, in 1683. He was one of several brothers under the Duke of Marlborough, and was killed at the battle of Blenheim. One of these brothers was a merchant in Boston at an early period. He subsequently held a public office in Sussex County, New Jersey, where he closed his career. Daniel Hollinshead went from England to Barbadoes, where he married, April 21, 1716, Thomasin, daughter of Peter Hasil, of that island. He soon after located in Sussex County, New Jersey, where he lived prosperously some years. He died, leaving children—Mary, Francis, Eleanor, Thomasin, Daniel, Elizabeth, William and John. As he died intestate, his eldest son, Francis, inherited the whole estate, which he squandered in a few years and died in 1796, leaving one son, John. Eleanor married Samuel Palmer, proprietor of the principal portion of that part of Philadelphia known as Kensington, then in an unimproved state. Thomasin married Jane Deuer, of Bucks County, Pa., and died in 1800, leaving one son, John, and a daughter, Eleanor. Elizabeth married Thomas Beans, of Abington, Pa., and John died at the age of nine years.

William Hollinshead, born October 11, 1728, died September 20, 1808, was bred to the sea. At the age of sixteen or seventeen he was at Barbadoes, where he relinquished his vocation and for a time studied medicine, but subsequently applied himself to acquiring a knowledge of mercantile affairs. This he also gave up and removed to Philadelphia, where he bound himself to William Boudinot, a goldsmith of that place. In 1748 he married Elizabeth, daughter of James and Sarah Harvey, and had children—William, Elizabeth, Jane, Sarah, John, James, Esther and Peter.



Rev. William Hollinshead, D.D., born September 27, 1749, died January 26, 1817, was educated for the Presbyterian ministry and became pastor of a church in Charleston, South Carolina. He married a lady of great culture and refinement, who bore him no children, and moved to Philadelphia, where she closed her days, distributing her property among her relatives and a number of public institutions.

Dr. James Hollinshead, son of William and brother of Rev. William Hollinshead, was born December 31, 1768, and died March 5, 1831. He was educated as a physician in the city of Philadelphia, and from there moved to Stroudsburg, Pa., where he married, July 13, 1794, Mrs. Sarah Morgan, widow of Captain Mordecai Morgan, and daughter of Colonel Jacob Stroud, the founder of Stroudsburg. The doctor was a graduate of the old school, of fine physique and pleasing address, possessing a good estate and enjoying an excellent practice. He was honest and just in all his dealings and died in the Christian faith. His remains rest in the old Hollinshead grave-yard, near Stroudsburg, where are also interred his wife and several of his children. His children were Sarah S., born March 21, 1795, married Anthony McCoy, of Mount Bethel, Pa., died February 24, 1826; James William, born July 2, 1796, died September 30, 1799; Edwin Augustus, born January 6, 1798, removed to Walworth County, Wis., died 1882; Stroud Jacob, born September 9, 1799, died October 7, 1864; Elizabeth, born August 23, 1801, died August 7, 1802; Daniel Stroud, formerly an elder of the First Presbyterian Church of Stroudsburg, subsequently removed to Wisconsin, died January 1, 1860; Elizabeth Harvey, born March 27, 1805, died November 6, 1844; William Hollinshead, born September 3, 1806, resides in Wisconsin; Robert, born October 21, 1808, died same day; Anna Stroud, born December 27, 1809, died July 25, 1825; Harriet, born October 18, 1811, died December 21, 1813; James, born May 6, 1813, died May 2, 1857, in Wisconsin; and Henry, born November 27, 1814, removed West, died December 3, 1864.

Dr. Peter Hollinshead, born February 13, 1777, died May 15, 1827, read medicine in Philadelphia and came with his brother, Dr. James Hollinshead, to Stroudsburg, Pa., where he married Ann Stroud, another daughter of Col. Jacob Stroud. He built and resided in the house now standing below the Presbyterian Church. This was the second house built in the town, the mansion-house of Col. Stroud being the first.

Stroud Jacob Hollinshead, son of Dr. James Hollinshead, to whom this sketch is inscribed, was born in the family homestead near Stroudsburg at the date indicated above. He enjoyed the benefits of a good classical education, and during his lifetime was one of the leading business men of Monroe County. In 1833 he built the old Stroudsburg House (now the Burnett), where he kept a tavern for thirty-five years. He also engaged in farming during that period, operated a mill and became interested in various speculative enterprises. He was a man of good judgment and character, of superior executive ability and liberal impulses, read men closely, and met with success in most of his business ventures. He also took a prominent part in the local politics of the county. In July, 1836, he gave to Monroe County the present site of the court-house, and devoted to Stroudsburg that portion of Franklin Street which extends from the Main Street to the court-house. He died in 1864, and is buried in the old Hollinshead graveyard, where a neat monument marks his grave. He married, February 2, 1819, Jeannette De Le Barre, born at Elmira, N. Y., May 3, 1803, daughter of Jacob De Le Barre and Rachel Smith, his wife. Her maternal grandfather was Dr. Francis J. Smith, a native of Brussels, whose true name was Josephus Jacobus Aerts, son of J. B. Aerts, Lord of Opdorp and Zimmerseele, and who changed his name for political reasons in 1777, when he came to this country to join the American army. His character and life-work are more fully referred to elsewhere in this volume. Dr. Smith married Elizabeth, daughter of Garret and Jane Davis Brodhead, a representative of another of the old families of the Minisink. Mrs. Jeannette Hollinshead is still one of the old residents of Stroudsburg, where she has lived for over sixty years. Owing to the death of her mother when she was an infant, she was reared in Monroe County by her great-grandmother Brodhead, and as at the present time she has great-grandchildren of her own, has had living communication with seven generations of her maternal lineage. She possesses a remarkably clear recollection of old events and ancient families and people, and is one of the respected and esteemed landmarks standing between the remote past and the ever-recurring events of the present. In the absence of a portrait of her husband, her own engraving will be found in this volume. Her children were Harriet, who became the wife of Dr. A. Reeves Jackson, and died Jan. 19, 1869; Sarah, who married Hon. John D. Morris, and died Jan. 27, 1854; Dr. Frank, who married Jane Malven, left descendants, and died December 24, 1856; William, a druggist for many years in Stroudsburg, married Cecilia Kenecht, died November 11, 1876; and Caroline, who died young in 1842.

Mrs Jeannette Hollinshead

Robert R. De Puy.—Among the old families of Monroe County who, at an early period in our colonial history, emigrated from the primitive settlement of Esopus, in Ulster County, N. Y., to the wild and unsettled region of the Minisink, none is probably of greater antiquity, or has been more prominently identified with the development of that region, than the family of Depuy.[1]

[1] The name is variously spelled in old papers Depui, Depuy, Depue and Depuis.

The original ancestor of the family is believed to have been Nicholas Depui, who, with three children, came to this country in October, 1662. He was a French Huguenot. In 1728 Nicholas, Benjamin and Cornelius Depuy were freeholders of Marbletown, Ulster County, N. Y.

The first ancestor to locate in Monroe County of whom we have any knowledge was Nicholas Depui, who came from Esopus about 1725, and made a settlement on the Delaware River, in what is now Smithfield township. He purchased land directly from the Indians, and the deed conveying the same is now in the possession of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. In 1733 he received a deed for some land of Wm. Allen. In 1742 Zinzendorf visited him, and in December, 1743, his name is found on a petition for a road. In 1750 Conrad Weiser visited him and states that he was an old man.

His will, bearing date June 9, 1745, mentions a wife, Wyntje, and his children—Moses, Samuel, Daniel, Aaron, Catharina, Susanna, Magdalena, Johanna and Elizabeth. By this instrument, which was witnessed by Daniel Brodhead, Abraham Van Campen, Benjamin Dupui and Lambert Coynese, his sons Moses, Aaron, Samuel and Daniel are made his executors, and judging from the quantity of land divided among his children, he must have owned a very large tract. Considerable personal property is also distributed, showing him to have been a man of wealth and distinction. His original stone house stood on the site occupied by a portion of the present family homestead, and was surrounded by a barricade, and used as a fort and place of shelter for the early settlers during the serious Indian outbreaks that often rendered the Minisink region one of the most dangerous points of pioneer life. The present house was erected in 1785 by Nicholas Depui, grandfather of our subject (born August 19, 1738, died April 23, 1808), who is described by the surveyor Scull as "The Amiable Nicholas Depuis, Esq.," occupying in 1787 "a spacious stone house in great plenty and affluence." The father of this Nicholas was Samuel (born 1719, died 1766), who is spoken of in 1730 by the same authority as the "Venerable Samuel Depui." At the time of Zinzendorf's visit he was twenty-three years of age.

Robt. K. DePuy

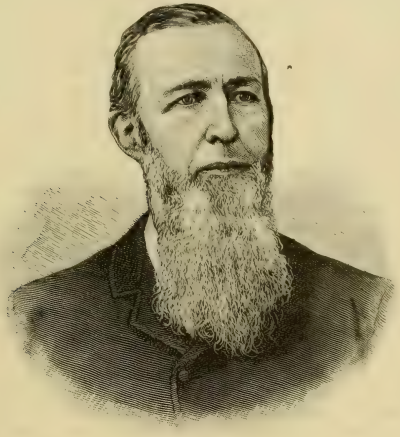
The son of Nicholas was Nicholas again, the father of Robert R. De Puy, who was born February 19, 1788, and died July 17, 1816. He married, June 12, 1812, Theodosia Reading (born September 17, 1791, died February 28, 1858), and had three children, of whom two died in infancy.

Robert R. De Puy, the remaining child of Nicholas and Theodosia (Reading) De Puy, was born in the ancestral mansion of his forefathers November 13, 1814. Owing to the death of his father, when he was but an infant, and the subsequent marriage of his mother to Isaac G. Farley, of Hunterdon County, N. J., his early life was passed at Flemington, in that State, where he enjoyed but limited opportunities for securing an education. When a mere lad he began life as a clerk in Mr. Farley's store at Flemington, and after a few years occupied a similar position in a store at Phillipsburg, N. J. In 1835 he was taken into partnership by his step-father, and the firm of Farley & De Puy was organized, with stores at Flemington and White House, N. J. This business association was dissolved four years later, Mr. De Puy taking the Flemington store in the division of the property, and organizing the firm of De Puy, Johnson & Risler.

He continued to engage in trade until 1843, and the following year removed to his native county of Monroe, and took up his residence on the old homestead in Smithfield. Here he remained, occupied in farming, until 1857, when he located at Stroudsburg, the county-seat, where he engaged in various mercantile enterprises until his recent retirement from active business life.

Mr. De Puy, throughout a long and industrious career, has manifested many of the sterling traits of character of his pioneer ancestors, and has achieved equal success in the more advanced fields of modern civilization. He is remarkable for great industry, good judgment and strict integrity in all the relations of life. He feels a just pride in the close identification of his ancestors with the original settlement of the country, and is the fifth in line of descent from the original Nicholas Depui to own the family homestead. Besides this, he has accumulated other real estate of value in the county, as well as out of it, and is recognized as one of the most prominent and substantial of the old residents of Monroe County. He has never evinced a desire for political prominence, but has been active in all other movements of an elevating and useful character. For thirty years he has been an elder of the Presbyterian Church of Shawnee; and he has also filled the office of president of the County Agricultural Society. He married, November 6, 1836, Matilda R., daughter of Judge Daniel H. Disborough, of Somerset County, N. J., who still presides over his home. There are no children.



Charles D. Brodhead is a lineal descendant in the seventh generation of Captain Daniel Brodhead, born in Yorkshire, England, captain of grenadiers and a Loyalist in the reign of King Charles II., by whom he was ordered to join the expedition under Colonel Richard Nicolls, which captured New Netherlands (New York) from the Dutch in 1664. He brought with him to this country his wife, Ann, daughter of Francis and Tellos (Solomon) Tye, and two sons,—Daniel and Charles. Richard, a third son, was born in this country in 1766. Captain Brodhead at first performed garrison duty at Albany and New York, but on September 14, 1665, was commissioned by Governor Nicolls as "Chief Officer of the Militia in the Esopus," and took up his residence in Ulster County, N. Y., where he died, July 14, 1667. From him have descended the various branches of the Brodhead family, male and female, which are now so numerously represented in the United States. A fuller account of the family lineage will be found elsewhere in this volume. The line of descent down to and including the subject of this sketch is (1) Daniel[1], (2) Richard[1], (3) Daniel[2], (4) Garret, (5) Richard[2], (6) Charles and (7) Charles D. Brodhead.

Daniel[2] Brodhead was the first of the family to locate in Pennsylvania. He was born at Marbletown, Ulster County, N. Y., April 20, 1693. About the year 1738 he purchased six hundred and forty acres of land on Analomink (now Brodhead's) Creek, on which the borough of East Stroudsburg, Monroe County, now stands, and passed his days in that place, being a man of great influence and prominence. His wife was Hester Wyngart, of whom were born ten children, of whom Daniel, Garret, Charles, Luke and Ann Garten survive him.

Garret Brodhead, son of Daniel[2], served as a lieutenant in a New Jersey regiment during the Revolutionary War. He married Jane Davis, of New York State, and settled on his father's farm (now East Stroudsburg), where he raised a large family, and died at Stroudsburg in 1804. His children were John, Daniel, Richard[2], George, Elizabeth (who married Francis J. Smith), Rachel (who married David Dills) and Samuel.

Richard[2] Brodhead was born at Stroudsburg July 26, 1771, and married Hannah Drake, of that place. He was a man of splendid physique, over six feet high, and about 1791 removed to Pike County, Pa., where he died November 11, 1843. He was a prominent and influential man and held many public offices. A fuller account of him and his children will be found in the Pike County portion of this work. His children were Sarah (1791), who married Colonel John Westbrook, a member of Congress from Wayne, Pike, Monroe and Northampton Counties from 1841 to 1843; Garret (1793), who married Cornelia Dingman; William (1795), who married Susan Coolbaugh; Jane, who married Moses S. Brundage; Albert G. (1799), who married Ellen Middagh; Anna Maria, who married John Seaman; Rachel, who married Dr. John J. Linderman; Charles (1801), who married Mary Brown; and Richard Brodhead, United States Senator from Pennsylvania from 1850 to 1856. Three other children died in infancy.

Charles Brodhead, son of Richard[2], was born on his father's homestead property, in Pike County, and in early manhood married Mary, daughter of Hon. Jacob Brown, one of the associate judges of Monroe County.

He soon after removed to Chestnut Hill township, in that county, and engaged in mercantile pursuits at what is now Brodheadsville. There he died a few years later of fever, leaving a widow and two children,—Charles D. Brodhead, born September 23, 1827, and Martha Jane, born January 21, 1830, who married, first, Captain George B. Keller, of Hamilton township, now deceased, and, secondly, her present husband, Conrad Kresge, of Pittston, Pa.

After his father's death Charles D. Brodhead resided with his grandfather Brown, at Stroudsburg, and attended school at the old Stroudsburg Academy, taught by Ira B. Newman. For two years he clerked in the store at Chestnut Hill, then carried on by his mother and his uncle Daniel Brown, and on February 1, 1848, married Rachel D. Keller, of Hamilton township. Immediately thereafter he located at Schaeffer's, called since 1862 Brodheadsville, after him, and engaged in hotel and store-keeping He remained at that point for seventeen years, filling the office of postmaster during all of that period, and being closely identified with the material, social and religious development of the locality. In 1865 he removed to Stroudsburg, where he has since been engaged in mercantile pursuits.

Judge Brodhead may truthfully be said to occupy a very high place in the esteem and confidence of the people of Monroe County, and has been a prominent factor in the development of its varied interests. While never aspiring to public positions, he has always been faithful to the principles of the Democratic party, and been prominent in the councils of that organization in this section. He has been honored by his fellow-citizens by the election to various offices of trust and responsibility. Besides holding different township offices in Chestnut Hill, he has served on the school board, and as Town Councilman of Stroudsburg, and in 1859, 1860 and 1861 represented the counties of Monroe and Pike in the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, serving his constituents with marked ability and fidelity. He was appointed deputy treasurer of Monroe County by Timothy Kresge, treasurer, and served in that capacity in 1878, 1879 and 1880. In the latter year he was elected associate judge of Monroe County, serving for five years in that capacity, and was re-elected in 1885 without opposition. He was also a member of the board of directors of the Stroudsburg Bank for many years. He has always taken a deep interest in church work, and has been for over twenty years an active and useful member of the Stroudsburg Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is now a trustee and treasurer. He is also a class-leader in the church, superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and chairman of the Monroe County Sabbath-School Association. His children now living are Joseph K., one of the assistant superintendents of the Bethlehem Rolling-Mill; Mary L., wife of Charles Evans, of Stroudsburg; and George M., a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, connected with the Philadelphia Conference and now located at Germantown, Pa.

Early Taverns.—The earliest tavern within the limits of the present borough of Stroudsburg was built by Colonel Jacob Stroud during the Revolution and known as the Fort Penn House, so called from its location directly in front of the site of Fort Penn, afterward the property owned by the late William Wintermute.

In 1795 he erected as a private residence the Mansion House, located at the corner of Elizabeth and William Streets, which is still standing. The next public-house was the Washington Hotel, built early during the present century at the east end of Elizabeth Street and still standing.

George Dreher was also a popular landlord at an early day, his location being on the spot now occupied by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Express Office. An early hotel, formerly a dwelling, occupied the ground on which now stands the American Hotel. It was afterward removed to the rear of the gas-house on Susan Street, having been sold by Jacob Knecht to William Wintermute. Among the early landlords of this house were Messrs. Dietrich, Kerr, Musch and Alexander Eagles, who came into possession about 1834; Jacob Knecht purchased of the administrators of the last-named owner, and on its removal erected the present brick structure. A landlord named Bush next assumed control and on his retirement was followed by David Pisle. Jacob S. McNeal, who is the present landlord of the Central, then leased it. Jerome Shaw, who was the next proprietor, preceded the present landlord, Timothy Everett.

The present Burnett House, which was formerly known as the Stroudsburg House, was built by Stroud J. Hollinshead in 1833. He first erected a temporary structure now standing adjacent to the hotel and occupied by Jesse Albert, which was used during the completion of the hotel and is embraced in the front portion of the present building. Mr. Hollinshead was for thirty-five years its popular landlord and conducted a thriving business. The hotel was sold in 1865 to Charles Troch, who was followed by Lynford Marsh, and he, in turn, by John I. Allender. Mr. Henry Fulmer, of Easton, then became the purchaser, by whom it was rebuilt, greatly enlarged and refurnished with much taste. It is now a much frequented summer resort under the able management of Jerome S. Williams.

The Washington Hotel, on Elizabeth Street, was built early during the present century. The first landlord within the recollection of the oldest citizens was one Keener, who was doubtless followed by John Musch. In 1828 it was under the management of Edward Postens, who kept it for many years and was followed in 1846 by his son, Joseph J. Postens. Simon and Abram Barry were its next landlords, who were succeeded by John Sant, and he by John Baldwin, after which it passed into the hands of the present landlord, William Dreher.

The Indian Queen Hotel was built by John Witchel as a private dwelling and converted into a hotel by John Shively, who was succeeded by James Place. John O'Hare became next landlord, after which David Keller, in 1851, removed from Hamilton township to the borough and leased the property for two years. He was succeeded by George Swartwood, and he by Joseph J. Postens, after which Melchior Buzzard came into possession and conducted it during the years 1865–66. He was succeeded by —— Sant, from Northampton County, after which John Shiffer became proprietor in connection with Jacob K. Shafer. The latter gentleman repaired, enlarged and at present keeps it.

The Central Hotel was built by John H. Mellick in 1851, and then known as the Fort Penn House. He was succeeded by M. B. Postens, after which it was abandoned as a house of entertainment and converted into a warehouse. John S. McNeal, on obtaining a license to keep a hotel, repaired and enlarged the building and has since managed it successfully as the Central Hotel.

BANKING.

Stroudsburg Bank.—The act organizing the Stroudsburg Bank was passed on the 9th of January, 1857, and its charter obtained on the 23d of June of the same year. Its officers under the charter were Depue S. Miller, president; James H. Stroud, cashier; and its board of directors, Jay Gould, Stephen Kistler, Henry M. La Bar, Thomas W. Rhodes, Charles D. Brodhead, John Boys, Stroud J. Hollinshead, David D. Walton, Michael Shoemaker, Charles Saylor, Morris Evans, William S. White and Depue S. Miller. The presidents in succession since that time have been S. S. Dreher, Stogdell Stokes, William Wallace and Thomas M. McIlhany. The cashiers who, in succession, followed Mr. Stroud are Jeremy Mackey and John S. Fisher. The charter of the bank having expired in 1872, it was, on the 6th of March of that year, rechartered. The amount of discounts of the bank average $275,000, and the deposits $350,000. The present directors are Peter M. Eilenberger, Jacob H. Fetherman, James Kintz, John Baltz, Charles L. Rhodes, Andrew Kaiser, Harry Peters, Jerome H. Fetherman, Levi Drake, Miles L. Hutchinson, Harry P. Nyce, William Smith and Stephen Holmes. The officers are Peter M. Eilenberger, president pro tem.; John S. Fisher, cashier; and B. S. Jacoby, teller.

THOMAS MCFALL MCILHANEY.—Among the prominent business men of Monroe County who identified themselves most closely for a long term of years with its social and material growth, none have occupied a more conspicuous and honorable place than the subject of this sketch. Born in Lower Mount Bethel township, in the mother-county of Northampton, May 13, 1823, he enjoyed but meagre educational advantages, and upon reaching sufficient age, learned the trade of a tailor with his father, William McIlhaney. In 1845 he located at Snydersville, Monroe County, where he pursued his trade until 1847, at which time he removed to Tannersville, in the same county. Here he filled various important offices in the township of Pocono, and served as postmaster of the village. From 1854 to 1857 he was deputy prothonotary under the late John Edinger, but was defeated for the same office himself in the latter year. After serving as a clerk in the office of Jacob Frey, auditor-general of the State, at Harrisburg, for nearly three years, he was, in 1860, elected as prothonotary of Monroe

Thomas McIlhaney

County, and was continuously re-elected to the same responsible and prominent place until 1878, when he retired from a position which he had filled with great ability and success for a longer period than any similar office has been held in the State by the same man, save in one instance. Upon his retirement from office he entered upon the study of law in the office of Hon. Charlton Burnett, with whom he had registered as a student a number of years before, and in 1880 was admitted to practice as an attorney-at-law. He at once acquired considerable practice among his old friends and constituents, and continued to labor earnestly and successfully at his profession until his sudden and unexpected demise, on December 15, 1885. Cut off at an untimely moment, while in the enjoyment of the highest confidence of his friends, and of the rewards achieved by an untiring, faithful and conscientious devotion to his public and private duties, his death brought with it to many the feeling that a good man in Israel had fallen, and to his immediate friends and family a poignancy of grief that none but they can realize.

The chief characteristics of Mr. McIlhaney may be described as great industry, the possession of a well-balanced and systematic mind, thorough integrity, perfect suavity of manner, combined with great force of character, devotion to family and friends, kindliness of heart, regard for the precepts and lessons of religion, and great liberality in the support of all worthy and elevating objects. To his neighbors and acquaintances he was ever kind and obliging. As an accountant he was most skillful and possessed of a wonderfully retentive memory. He was firm in his convictions of right, yet considerate and forbearing with those who differed with him. In society he was one of the most companionable of men, and his fine social qualities endeared him to every community in which he lived. He was a prominent and influential resident of Stroudsburg from 1861, identified with various social organizations, and was president of the Stroudsburg Bank at the time of his death. He was a regular attendant of the Presbyterian Church, of which he was for many years a trustee and a liberal supporter. He married, August 15, 1846, Catharine M., daughter of James C. and Hester (Bitters) Major, of Northampton County, who survives him, with six children, namely, Georgiana (wife of Edward Baltz, of Stroudsburg), Fanny (wife of William Long, of Williamsport, Pa.), Flora (wife of Walter Rafferty, of Brooklyn, N. Y.), Clara (wife of Dr. William Wolfe, of Chatham, N. J.) and Misses Ella and Gussie Mc Ilhaney.

Thomas A. Bell is descended from Quaker ancestry, the progenitor of the family in America having been Henry Bell, who, on his probable emigration from England, settled in Montgomery County, Pa. Among his children was a son John, born in 1721, who died in 1773. He was married to Hannah Reese and had one son, Jonathan, born in 1749, who died in 1773. He was united in marriage to Mary Stroud, whose children by this marriage were two sons, James and Isaiah. James Bell was born on the 8th of March, 1771, and died on the 14th of January, 1851. He was married to Susan Thomas, and had children—Joseph; Mary, wife of Aaron Croasdale; John T.; James; Susanna; Jane, wife of John Jordan, Jr. James Bell, of this number, was born on the 10th of August, 1808, and married Hannah Alsop, whose children are Francis J., Edwin A., Thomas A., William B., Charles, Emma and Henry A. The birth of Thomas A. Bell occurred at Experiment Mills, in Smithfield township, on the 20th of December, 1844. He pursued his studies at the Westtown Boarding-School, in Chester County, Pa., remaining several years both as pupil and instructor. Returning home, he became engaged with his father in his varied milling and lumbering interests of Experiment Mills. Subsequently accepting a position in the Stroudsburg Bank, he removed to Stroudsburg, and continued thus engaged until 1870, when he established a banking interest known as the Monroe County Banking and Savings Company. Closing his connection with this institution in 1880, and removing to Trenton, N. J., where a wider field for his rare business abilities awaited him, he assumed charge of the Merchants' Transportation Company as its general superintendent, and in 1881 became interested in the Star Rubber Company, as secretary and general manager, continuing at the same time his former business relation. He also became identified with the Trenton China Company, of which he is the present treasurer, though devoting his time principally to the interests of the Star Rubber Company.

Mr. Bell has been an important factor in the establishment and development of the leading business enterprises of Stroudsburg. To him is largely due the inception, as also the construction, of the Stroudsburg Passenger Railway and the establishment of the Chemical Pulp Company. He was prominently identified with the Tanite Company for eight years, and during a considerable part of that time occupied the position of treasurer of the company. He was also, with partners, interested in the Luzerne Ochre Works, in Luzerne County, Pa., and connected with other important business ventures. Mr. Bell has always affiliated with the Republican party in politics, though both his extended business interests and his tastes have precluded an active political career. He is an earnest and outspoken advocate of the cause of temperance, which has received from him substantial support and encouragement. In his religious views he is loyal to the faith of his forefathers. Mr. Bell was, on the 17th of September, 1868, married to Elizabeth, daughter of Philip P. Dunn, of Trenton, N. J. Their children are Albert T., Frederick D., William B. and Philip D., who is deceased.

First National Bank of Stroudsburg.—This bank was organized September 21, 1882, with a capital of fifty thousand dollars and the following directors: R. S. Staples, Alonzo B. Shafer, George E. Stauffer, Jacob R. Shafer, Isaac T. Puterbaugh, Melchior Heller, Thomas A. Bell, Amzi B. Wyckoff, David Saylor, Frank H. Smith, Stroud Burson.

Richard S. Staples was chosen its first president; Frank H. Smith, vice-president; E. A. Bell, cashier; and Oscar Dreher, teller. Richard S. Staples resigned July 1, 1885, and Frank H. Smith was elected in his stead, David Saylor being elected vice-president. The board of directors is still the same, with the exception of George Butz, George C. Adams and Absalom Fetherman in places of Isaac T. Puterbaugh, T. A. Bell and R. S. Staples, respectively. The amount of discounts averages one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars and the deposits a like amount. The bank has a circulation of twenty-five thousand dollars.

Richard S. Staples.—One of the earliest settlers of Northampton County, Pa., was John Staples, who was born in London, May 18, 1754, and died February 2, 1843; he came from England prior to the Revolution, and settled therein. He was a farmer, but never invested in land, but rented it from others. He served in the Continental army, in which he was a sergeant. He married Elizabeth Teeple, who bore him the following children: John, William, George, Nelson, Richard, Elizabeth, Rachel, Mary and Polly.

From his home in Northampton County he moved into Smithfield township, in what is now Monroe County, where both he and his wife passed the remainder of their days. William, the second son, was born in Smithfield township January 31, 1786, where he grew to manhood. He engaged in lumbering, and owned, with his son R. S., the saw-mill at Sprague ville known as Staples' Mill. He married Elizabeth Long. Their children were Margaret, Mary Ann, John L., Sallie, Richard S., Eliza, Amanda, Nelson, Rachel and Daniel. Mr. Staples was a Democrat in politics, but not a politician. He died at Sprague ville June 9, 1847; his wife in 1844. Richard S. Staples, our subject, was born in Smithfield township January 27, 1818. He attended the district schools of his neighborhood and received, as did his brothers and sisters, as good an education as could be given at that time in his native township. In 1827 he accepted a situation as clerk in the store of Stokes & Brown, of Stroudsburg, which position he held one year, then became a partner in the place of Brown, whose interest he bought.

He continued in partnership with Judge Stokes seven years, and, during that time, had the entire management of the store. He then bought the judge's interest, and, for a quarter of a century, carried on the business. In 1862 he sold the store, since when he has engaged in various business enterprises, lumbering, however, being his principal business. In partnership with Thomas A. Bell and Simon Barry, he owned and operated an ochre-mill in Luzerne County for three years and a half, when they sold out, and the property, depreciating in value from want of proper management, has again come into possession of Mr. Staples, with his son Stogdell as partner.

Mr. Staples, Simon Barry, Thomas A. Bell, Dr. Lantz and Colonel Burnett were the builders of the Stroudsburg Street Railway, and he was the first president of the company and remained so until he sold his interest. In company with the above-named gentlemen, he organized the Monroe County Savings Bank, which was changed to the First National Bank of Stroudsburg, and of which he was elected president, which position he held until the 1st of January, 1885. He was also one of the organizers of the Stroudsburg Woolen Mills and its first president. For many years he was president of the Monroe County Fire Insurance Company. In February, 1883, he purchased an interest in the Trenton China Company and has since then been its president and manager. In politics he is, and always has been, a stanch Democrat, and has been honored by his fellow-citizens with borough, township and county offices, all of which he has filled with credit and to the satisfaction of his constituents. He has served two terms (1872–73) in the lower branch of the Pennsylvania Legislature with ability and the energy characteristic of his business career. He was a member of five different committees.

He has been a member of the Methodist Church since he was thirteen years old and has been steward and trustee many years. He has taken an active interest in Sabbath-schools and has been a superintendent thirty-two years in succession. In Monroe County, Pa., where Mr. Staples resided until 1883, he is spoken of as a business man of sterling integrity and possessed of executive talent of more than ordinary merit. On the 20th day of May, 1840, he led to the altar Miss Deborah, daughter of Cornelius and Margaret Coolbaugh, who bore him children as follows: Theodore, Daniel and Mary. Mrs. Staples died in 1846. In November, 1848, he was again married, his choice being Mary Ann, daughter of Dr. John Thompson. Their union has been blessed with six children, namely,—Ella, Charles, Stogdell, William, Mary and May.

Bell, secretary; Simon Barry, treasurer. It has from that time to the present enjoyed a career of uninterrupted prosperity, its loans having in 1885 reached the sum of $113,600. Its present officers are Garret Ramsey, president; George E. Shaffer, vice-president; E. A. Bell, secretary; and Simon Barry, treasurer.

STROUDSBURG GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.—The corporation known as the Stroudsburg Gas-Light Company was formed during the summer of 1875 by J. Gardner Haines and W. B. Buck, the latter acting as president and the former as secretary of the company. Bonds and stock were issued and chiefly disposed of in the borough. The bank building, better known as the old Presbyterian Church, on Sarah Street, was purchased and transformed into a gas-house, after which it became the receptacle of the varied machinery accessory to the manufacture of illuminating gas, such as retorts, superheaters, wash-boxes, scrubbers, engines and boilers. Lowe's process was introduced, the laying of the main pipes was begun and in the fall of the same year the company was able to furnish gas to the citizens of Stroudsburg.

W. O. Florey was appointed superintendent of the works and continued to act in that capacity until the fall of 1876, when, under a new board of direction, the following officers were elected: David Keller, president; Hon. J. B. Storm, secretary; F. McIlhaney, treasurer. Soon after J. G. Keller was chosen as superintendent of the works, and continued to fill that position until February 16, 1876, when the property became his by purchase. Under his management the main has been extended, a number of improvements made and a very considerable increase made in the list of consumers.

STROUDSBURG WATER COMPANY.—The Stroudsburg Water Company was organized and its charter obtained in May, 1876, through the efforts of Dr. J. A. Cloud. The first meeting was held on the 7th of September of the same year, with the following gentlemen as officers and directors: Joseph Matlack, president; P. S. Williams, secretary; Jesse Cloud, treasurer; Directors, John B. Storm, Jesse Cloud, Joseph Matlack, J. Albert Cloud, P. S. Williams. The capital stock of the company was fixed at sixteen thousand dollars. Fox Hill, one mile from the borough of Stroudsburg, was selected as an advantageous site, and works were at once erected under the supervision of J. A. Cloud, civil engineer. In January, 1877, William G. Pennypacker, of Wilmington, Delaware, purchased and is the present owner of the property. Mr. Matlack was succeeded by William Wallace as president, and he by John B. Storm, the present incumbent. The remaining officers are William G. Pennypacker, treasurer; P. S. Williams, secretary; Frederick Phillips, superintendent.

STROUDSBURG PASSENGER RAILWAY.—Previous to the year 1870 the only public means of reaching the depot of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad from Stroudsburg was by omnibus. This method did not altogether meet the wants of the residents of the borough, and, April 26, 1870, a company was formed consisting of Hon. R. A. Burnett, R. S. Staples, Thomas A. Bell, Simon Barry and Dr. J. Lantz, who obtained a charter and organized the "Stroudsburg Passenger Railway Company." They immediately began the work of construction, and in four and a half months from that date the passenger and freight cars were making regular trips between the depot and East Stroudsburg. The first officers were Charlton Burnett, president; R. S. Staples, superintendent; and T. A. Bell, secretary and treasurer. The directors were Messrs. Staples, Lantz, Barry and Bell. The entire cost of the road was twenty-five thousand six hundred dollars. A perceptible advantage to the community from the building of the road was apparent in the reduction of rates, the passenger fare having been reduced from twenty-five cents to five and seven cents, and the freight rate to half its former figures. The value of real estate was also to no small degree enhanced by the completion of the enterprise.

It is conceded that this street railway was the first to apply heat to street railways, its cars having been rendered comfortable by stoves from the beginning. The company carries from twenty-five to thirty thousand passengers annually, and has, in addition, a coal-yard, the yearly sales of which reach from two to three thousand tons.

The original stockholders have, with the exception of Dr. Lantz, disposed of their interest, he being now its president, treasurer and general manager.

MANUFACTURES.

Stroudsburg, notwithstanding its advantages of water-power and its railroad facilities, is not a manufacturing centre, and this interest is but meagrely represented.

An act of Legislature was passed on the 8th of February, 1815, incorporating a manufacturing company in Stroudsburg, Northampton County, the commissioners appointed to organize this company being Daniel Stroud, Samuel Brook and Peter Hollinshead, of the same county. It was to be styled the "Stroudsburg Manufacturing Company," but the purpose of its organization is not stated and no records exist to indicate the subsequent completion of the project.

W. R. BENNETT & CO., MANUFACTURERS OF LEATHER.—Tanning and the manufacture of leather has always been a prominent and important interest in Stroudsburg and Monroe County. The oldest tannery in Stroudsburg was erected and run by Charles and Jacob Stroud, sons of Daniel Stroud, in 1822, then in Northampton County. In 1833, after the death of Jacob Stroud, it was sold by the guardian of his children to Depue S. Miller, who managed it till 1849, when it passed into the possession of James R. Hull, then of Newton, N. J., and by him again to his brother Gershom, who is the present owner of the property, which has been idle since 1875. The product of the tannery was, under the Stroud brothers, "custom" work and later Union crop sole-leather. The Stroudsburg Tannery was built by Jacob Singmaster about 1841, who operated it until 1876. It was then sold to Barnes & Merritt, who conducted it till 1871. After lying idle for two years it was sold to Bennett & Dunk. After a partnership of four years Dunk retired and Mr. Cummings was a partner for about a year, when the partnership was changed to W. R. Bennett & Co. The product of this manufactory has always been very important, viz.: imitation of bright and dull goat, glove calf, buff, war and harness leather and finished splits. The consumption of hides is two hundred and fifty per week. It employs all the most recent machinery and appliances and has the reputation of making and finishing as good stock as finds a market. It employs about fifty hands.

STROUDSBURG WOOLEN-MILLS.—The company which built these mills was organized in the fall of 1865 with a capital of forty-five thousand dollars (the stock being principally held in Stroudsburg), and began operations in the winter of 1866. It was conducted for a short time by the company and subsequently leased to the firm of Doster Bros., of Bethlehem, Pa., after which Messrs. Kitson, Walker & Davis became the lessees. It later passed into the hands of Messrs. Wallace & Kitson, and is at present controlled by James Davis, of Stroudsburg. It is thoroughly equipped with machinery of modern and improved pattern, has twenty-eight looms and employs one hundred and twenty hands. The product is chiefly material for overcoatings, of which fourteen thousand yards of six-fourths goods are produced per month and consigned to the New York market, where a ready demand for them exists. Both steam and water-power are employed in running the mills. The present manager is Thomas Kitson.

WILLIAM ACKERMAN'S FLOURING-MILL.—This mill, situated on the Pocono Creek, was built by Daniel Stroud during the years 1822–23. It was run by him for some years, then leased to other parties and finally came into possession of Stroud Hollinshead, who owned it for a period of twenty years, during which time it was rented to other parties. Its owners after that date were Peter Zimmerman, Valentine Albert, Jacob Harman and Gotlieb Auracher.

In 1860 Wm. Ackerman, in connection with Gotlieb Auracher, purchased the property, which was conducted under the firm name of Auracher & Ackerman for two years, when Jacob Harman secured the interest of Mr. Auracher and the firm became Ackerman & Harman. This business interest continued until 1873, when Mr. Ackerman purchased the property, of which he has since been sole owner. The last-mentioned firm made many improvements, including new machinery and a general reconstruction of the interior portion of the mill. In 1885 Mr. Ackerman introduced the roller process and made other important changes, thereby increasing the capacity of the mill and insuring the superior quality of its productions. The building is forty by fifty feet in dimensions. Both custom and merchant work are done, the daily capacity being one hundred bushels. The wheat flour ground finds a ready market at home, the rye flour being principally shipped to Newark, N. J. The mill is entirely dependent upon water-power, which is ample for its needs.

FLOURING-MILL OF JAMES GARDNER.—During the year 1863 a mill was built on the McMichael Creek, on the site of the present structure, by Messrs. Heistand & Gardner. It was forty by fifty feet in dimensions, had four run of stone, and was devoted to the manufacture of flour and feed. Mr. Gardner purchased the interest of his partner in 1866, and was for a brief time sole owner, after which William Wallace secured an interest, the firm becoming Wallace & Gardner. A disastrous freshet in 1869 swept the mill away, and the present commodious building was erected in 1870, the firm remaining the same until June, 1884, when Mr. Wallace retired from the business. The stream on which the mill is built furnishes ample power. It has four run of stone, six sets of rollers and a capacity of five hundred bushels every twenty-four hours. It is chiefly occupied with merchants' work and finds a ready market for its flour at adjacent points along the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and in Newark, N. J. It is thoroughly equipped with the modern and requisite machinery for doing superior work.

SASH FACTORY, PLANING AND SAW-MILL OF WILLIAM WALLACE.—Mr. Wallace, in 1865, purchased the water-power he controls on McMichael Creek, and erecting a saw-mill, opened in connection with it a lumber-yard. Six years later he added a sash factory and planing-mill, a flooring-machine being connected with the latter. All the material required for building, including sash, blinds, flooring, railing, siding, brackets, etc., is furnished here. The factory works up in various forms about one million feet of lumber per year. The sawmill is confined to the sawing of oak timber, hemlock and spruce being sawed at the mills owned by Mr. Wallace on the Lehigh, in Wayne County, where two million feet per year are produced. Scranton, Pa., furnishes a market for the timber sawed at the latter mills, while the home demand is sufficient to keep the factory constantly active.

THE PRESS.

THE STROUDSBURG GAZETTE.—The first number of the Stroudsburg Gazette was issued in the fall of 1832 by John P. Robeson & Co. It is described as a paper half the size of the Jeffersonian, and decidedly Democratic in its political proclivities. Its existence was doubtless brief, as no files have been preserved to indicate an extended or successful career.

THE MONROE DEMOCRAT.—The Monroe Democrat was founded at Stroudsburg before Monroe was erected into a county, by James Rafferty, who came from Wilkes-Barre, Luzerne County, where he was born, grew up and learned the trade of a printer. When it first made its appearance it was just half its present size. It was published every Wednesday, at two dollars per year, and was a very creditable paper for that early time. In his prospectus Mr. Rafferty says: "It will be conducted upon Republican principles and support the regular Democratic nominations for National and State officers." It was therefore a Democratic paper from the start and always remained such to the present day. Some years afterwards, as the business of the office had grown to considerable dimensions, Mifflin Hannum, also of Wilkes-Barre, became a partner in the publication of the Democrat. This was continued under the firm of Rafferty & Hannum until 1847, when Luther J. Ringwalt, of Philadelphia, succeeded and published it until 1852. During a part of this time it was issued under the firm-name of Ringwalt & Schoonover, with Barnet Schoonover, of Middle Smithfield, as a partner. These parties sold out to David Keller, of Stroudsburg, who published the Democrat about five years, being assisted editorially by E. L. Wolf, a son of Governor George Wolf, of Easton. About 1857 Mr. Keller sold to John De Young, Esq., of Flicksville, Northampton County, who, assisted by E. L. Wolf, continued its publication for about nine years. In 1866 Mr. De Young was elected one of the associate judges of that county, after which he sold the Democrat to A. O. Greenwald, of Allentown. About this time Thomas McIlhaney and Stephen Holmes had bought the material of the Northern Eagle, at Milford, Pa., and were about starting a new paper. The Democrats of the county feared this would result in splitting the party. After buying Holmes' interest in the new venture, Greenwald and McIlhaney combined the two offices and the new project was dropped. Mr. Greenwald four months later bought McIlhaney's interest and conducted the business alone until April, 1879, when he sold to R. S. Staples. Mr. Staples conducted it one year, when he sold the office again to Mr. Greenwald. The latter then published the Democrat until July 15, 1882, when he sold to Morey, Shull & Heller, then publishing the Monroe Journal, which was later absorbed by the Democrat. Mr. Heller retired from the paper in 1884, his share being taken by Dr. Shull. In April, 1885, A. O. Greenwald bought a half-interest in the Democrat again and it is now published under the firm-name of A. O. Greenwald & Co., B. T. Morey being its editor.

AMANDUS OTT GREENWALD was born in Greenwich township, Berks County, Pa., August 12, 1840. He removed with his parents to Allentown five years afterwards and obtained his early education in the public schools of the city. At the age of thirteen he entered the office of the Lehigh Register, edited by A. L. Ruhe, and subsequently by C. Frank Haines and David Diefenderfer, where he remained for three years learning the printer's trade, in which he became proficient, and made somewhat practical his book knowledge obtained at school. He spent the following year in the book-office of L. Johnson & Co. (now Johnson Type Foundry, Philadelphia), and feeling himself fully conversant with type-setting, he started out as a journeyman, with a view of further prosecuting his knowledge in journalistic work and of visiting the then important places in the United States. For three full years, 1857–58–59, he worked at his trade as a journeyman in different places, and traveled through twenty-five States and two Territories—West and South. Returning to Allentown, he further prosecuted his studies at the Allentown Academy and Allentown Seminary for three years, and for three years thereafter was a teacher in that city and in schools near by. He then made a tour of Europe for nearly one year, and visited France, Switzerland, Baden, Luxemburg, Würtemberg, Belgium, England and Ireland, thus adding largely to his store of general information and better fitting himself for the duties which he early began to make his life-work.

Upon his return, Mr. Greenwald, in 1866, purchased the Monroe Democrat, at Stroudsburg, of Hon. John De Young, which he has ably conducted most of the time since—a period of twenty years.

During his residence in Stroudsburg he has supported personally and through the columns of his paper all enterprises tending to develop and build up the borough and county as an integral part of the State, and secure to its citizens the highest plane of moral, religious and educational privileges, and politically to support unflinchingly the principles of the Democratic party.

A. O. Greenwald

On August 26, 1867, he married Lorraine L., a daughter of Solomon and Louisa (Gangwer) Bieber, of Allentown, Pa., by which union he has four daughters,—Mary, Blanche, Martha and Betsey.

The progenitor of the Greenwald family in Lehigh County, Jacob Greenwald, came from Germany, and was one of the early settlers in Weisenburg township, that county, and with his son, Jacob Greenwald, Jr., are reported on assessment rolls of that township for 1781. This Jacob, Jr., was the father of Christian, who married Miss Weiss, by whom he had children,—Amos (1811–72), father of our subject, who bought land at Smithville, Berks County, Pa., where he erected the first building in the place, a hotel, which he conducted for four years, when he removed to Allentown, where he spent the remainder of his active business life working at his trade as a mason. His widow, Leah Ott, born April 3, 1816, survives in 1886, and resides at Fleetwood, Berks County, with her son. Their children are Amandus Ott Greenwald and Dr. Manderville Greenwald, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, and a practicing physician at Fleetwood. The other children of Christian Greenwald are Reuben, a farmer, died on the homestead, township of Weisenburg, Lehigh County; John a weaver, died at Hokendauqua; Stephen, a cooper, died at Lobachsville, Lehigh County; Daniel, a contractor and builder in Allentown; and Salome, deceased, was wife of Nathan Schlenk, of Berks County.

The Jeffersonian was started in Stroudsburg, by a number of leading Whigs of Pike and Monroe Counties, as a joint-stock enterprise, and Richard Nugent, who was then engaged in the newspaper business in Honesdale, was invited to take charge of the paper, which he accordingly did. The first number was issued January 15, 1840. There was no paper published in Pike County at that time, and C. W. De Witt's name was inserted with Nugent's as editor of a Milford edition, which was circulated in Pike County, as a Pike County paper. This arrangement continued for about four years. Richard Nugent removed to Nova Scotia, where he established a newspaper, after publishing the Jeffersonian for a brief period. Theodore Schoch assumed control of the paper February 24, 1841. When first started it was called the Jeffersonian Republican, and the name afterward changed by Mr. Schoch to Jeffersonian. The paper was at first a five-column folio, and has since been enlarged to a six-column folio. Theodore Schoch, the veteran editor of the Jeffersonian, was born at Mooresburg, Northampton County, Pa., October 30, 1814. He obtained his education in the common schools when they were kept open but three months in the year, walking three miles to school, which was held in a log school-house of the old pattern, with holes bored in the logs around the side, at a small angle from a horizontal position, into which round sticks were driven and boards were laid across for desks. The seats were slab benches. When a lad he lived with the Nyces, in Lehman, Pike County, for a short time. In the fall of 1834, or the spring of 1835, he commenced to work in the printing-office of J. P. Hetrich, of Easton, editor of the Whig and Journal. He remained there about three years, and then worked on the Easton Sentinel for one year, after which he returned to the Whig office, and remained thus employed until July 14, 1840, the date of his arrival in Stroudsburg.

John A. Carter had been publishing the Jeffersonian since the departure of Mr. Nugent. February 24, 1841, Mr. Schoch, as editor, issued the first number of the Jeffersonian, and has continued to control the paper since, covering a period of more than forty-five years. The Jeffersonian has been published in the interest of the Whig and Republican parties. The paper was started during an exciting political agitation, which led to the nomination and election of William H. Harrison. At that election Harrison carried the State of Pennsylvania by three hundred and forty-three majority, and Monroe County gave him three hundred and forty-five votes. The Whigs of Monroe, although in a minority in the county, claimed they saved the State for Harrison. Van Buren at the same election had fourteen hundred and forty-seven votes, making a total of seventeen hundred and ninety-two votes cast by Monroe County November 6, 1840.

CHURCHES.

Stroudsburg Methodist Episcopal Church.—It is exceedingly difficult to fix the time when the first Methodist services were held in Stroudsburg. The historians of Methodism do not refer to the territory lying between the Pocono Mountains and the Lehigh River and the Delaware River and the Schuylkill, yet that territory was traversed by mighty ones of God, who endured hardships, privations and sufferings known to few ministers of the present day.

Father Boehm and Dr. Stevens refer quite frequently to John Brodhead, a prominent minister in New England Methodism. This John Brodhead entered the itinerancy in 1794. He was born in Smithfield township, Northampton County, Pa., October 5, 1770, in what was then known as "the Brodhead Settlement."

From these facts it may be inferred that Methodist preaching was heard in the vicinity of his home as early as the year 1791 or 1792. It is not improbable that Stroudsburg was first visited by the preachers appointed to Bristol Circuit as early as 1788.

The name of William Colbert, son-in-law of Colonel Jacob Stroud, cannot be too highly honored by the church in Stroudsburg. Although not the founder of Methodism in that vicinity, and although his name does not appear in any close relations to that territory until his appointment to Bristol Circuit in 1796, he may not inappropriately be styled the foster-father of Methodism in the present county of Monroe.

In 1825 William Colbert, who had been previously located, was re-admitted to the traveling ministry and appointed to Stroudsburg. That was the first appearance of Stroudsburg in the "Annual Minutes of the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church." In 1826 Stroudsburg retained William Colbert as pastor.

In 1827 Lawrence McCombs was presiding elder of East Jersey District. The appointments for Warren Circuit and for Stroudsburg were the same as in 1826. Up to the close of 1827 the preachers in charge of Warren Circuit assisted William Colbert at Stroudsburg as regularly as though they had been appointed to the circuit. Warren Circuit included Easton, Northampton County, Pa., while Stroudsburg was the name given to a circuit extending from a few miles above Easton to the Pocono Mountains, and from the Delaware Water Gap to Mauch Chunk. David Best and James Dandy preached in Stroudsburg alternately every two weeks.

In 1828 Jacob Hevener was appointed to Stroudsburg, with William Colbert, supernumerary.

In 1829 Asbury District was formed, and George Banghart appointed presiding elder.

Samuel Grace, James V. Potts and William Colbert, supernumerary, were appointed to Stroudsburg.

Up to this year the society in Stroudsburg was without a church edifice. The Sunday services, class and prayer-meetings were held at different places, principally at the residence of William Colbert. When the academy, which stands at the corner of Green and Elizabeth Streets, was built, it became the regular place for preaching.

Soon after Samuel Grace's appointment as the preacher in charge efforts were made to secure a lot of ground and build a church. A lot containing 36 $\frac{4}{10}$ perches was procured from Daniel Stroud and Mary, his wife. The consideration was one dollar specie. The conveyance was made August 31, 1829, to the "trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in trust, that they shall erect and build, or cause to be erected and built, a house or place of worship for the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

The trustees named were William Colbert, John C. Melvin, Samuel Pugh, John Brown, George Huston, Michael Misner, Thomas Smiley, William Stiff and Michael Brown. A frame church, thirty-two feet by forty-eight, was erected at a cost of about $800,000, and in due time dedicated to the service and worship of Almighty God.

In 1830, Samuel Grace, Bromwell Andrews and William Colbert, supernumerary, were the preachers.

The preaching-places on the circuit at that time were nine, as follows: Deamer's, eight miles below Easton; Piscott's Swamp; Stoddartsville, a place not far from where the present town of Moscow is located; John Sebring's, in Pocono township; Joseph Lee's, on Brodhead Creek; Stroudsburg; Williamsburg and Richmond.

In 1831, James V. Potts, William Bloomer and William Colbert, supernumerary, were the preachers. In 1832, Thomas Miller, Oliver Badgely and William Colbert, supernumerary. In 1833, North Philadelphia District was formed. George Banghart was appoint presiding elder, and Bromwell Andrews, John McDougal and William Colbert, supernumerary, were appointed to Stroudsburg.

The Conference for that year was held in Newark, New Jersey, commencing April 17th. In less than three months after its close, William Colbert ceased to live on earth. He died at Stroudsburg on the 16th of June, 1833, aged sixty-eight years, one month and twenty-six days. Father Boehm, who knew William Colbert long and intimately, says, "He was a great little man in the days of his glory."

In 1834, Abraham K. Street and William Bloomer were appointed to Stroudsburg. This was the last appointment William Bloomer received from the Conference. In the month of November he was called to his home in heaven.

In 1835, Jonas Bissey and John L. Taft were appointed to Stroudsburg, but John L. Taft was removed to another field of labor a short time after Conference, and James Flannery was employed by the presiding elder in his place. In 1836 the German Mission was united with Stroudsburg. Jonas Bissey and Jacob Davidson were the preachers. In 1837, James Smith was appointed presiding elder. Stroudsburg and Mauch Chunk were united under the care of Jacob Davidson and James Neill. In 1838 the German Mission and Stroudsburg were again united. Jacob Davidson and William K. Goentner were the preachers; in 1839, James Harmer and Peter Eisenbrey, the latter under the presiding elder. In 1840, James Flannery was appointed preacher in charge, and John Allen and Peter J. Cox were employed as assistants by the presiding elder.

At the close of 1840 Mt. Bethel was separated from Stroudsburg and was supplied with preaching by Thomas Mack, who was employed by the presiding elder. Thomas Mack joined the Presbyterian Church in 1842. At the close of his year's labors the name of the circuit was changed to Richmond, and this it has been called ever since. Stoddartsville was also separated from Stroudsburg at the close of 1840, and Peter J. Cox appointed its first preacher in charge in 1841.

In 1841, James Flannery continued in charge of Stroudsburg. Solomon Higgins was made presiding elder of North Philadelphia District. In 1842, David E. Gardner and Henry B. Mauger were the preachers in Stroudsburg, the latter being employed by the presiding elder. In 1843, David E. Gardner was reappointed to Stroudsburg. Cherry Valley was made a distinct circuit and Mahlon H. Sisty appointed preacher in charge. In 1844, John Ruth was preacher in charge. Paradise was made a distinct circuit, and John Shields appointed preacher in charge in 1844. Stroudsburg, Cherry Valley and Paradise were all called missions. In 1845, James H. McFarland was appointed presiding elder of Reading District. All of the appointments north of Attleboro', bordering on the Delaware River, were included in that district. The divisions which had been made in Monroe County were not profitable. A return to the old arrangement of one circuit was deemed advisable. Cherry Valley and Paradise were included under the name of Stroudsburg. John Edwards was preacher in charge. —— Bremmer was assistant, employed by the presiding elder.

In 1846, William L. Gray and Samuel R. Gillingham were the preachers, the latter under the presiding elder. In 1847 and 1848, John W. Mecaskey was preacher in charge. William B. Walton was employed as assistant by the presiding elder in 1847 and William H. Boswell in 1848. In 1849, Elijah Miller was appointed presiding elder of Reading District. Mahlon H. Sisty was preacher in charge of Stroudsburg, with Frederick Illman as assistant under the presiding elder. In 1850, Stroudsburg was again part of North Philadelphia District. Robert Gerry, presiding elder, and M. H. Sisty and James N. King were the preachers, the latter under the presiding elder.

In 1851 and 1852, John A. Watson and William B. Wood were the preachers. They reported at the close of their first year two hundred and ninety-five members and twelve probationers. At the close of their second year they reported two hundred and forty-four members and seventy-one probationers.

During their pastorate, J. A. Watson and W. B. Wood took the preliminary steps to secure a larger and more comfortable church edifice. A lot was selected, though not purchased, and many of the arrangements made for the building of a substantial brick church. At the close of their term of service Stroudsburg became a station, which it has remained until this present time.

In 1853, Joseph Castle was presiding elder of North Philadelphia District. James Hubbard was appointed to Cherry Valley Circuit, and John F. Boone to Stroudsburg.

The arrangements for removal from the old frame church were completed during the pastorate of Bro. Boone, which continued until the spring of 1855.

On the 27th of May, 1853, application was made to the court of Monroe County for a charter incorporating "the Stroudsburg Methodist Episcopal Church."

The petitioners were Robert Boys, Stroud Burson, Charles R. Andre, Samuel Rees, Michael M. Burnet, Richard S. Staples and James Van Buskirk. On the 26th of September, 1853, the court granted the prayer of the petitioners. A lot having been secured, the work of building was commenced and pushed forward with vigor, although the edifice was not occupied until August, 1854. The entire cost of the church was six thousand one hundred and seventy-five dollars, all of which was provided for before the dedication, except six hundred and sixty-one dollars. The pastor was assisted in the dedicatory services by Bishop Levi Scott, Dr. Castle, the presiding elder, and David W. Bartine.

In 1854, James Hubbard was appointed to Stroudsburg as supernumerary with John F. Boone. On the 20th of February, 1855, Mr. John Boys and Hannah S. Boys, his wife, executed the deed for the lot on which the new church had been built. The consideration was seven hundred dollars in specie. The trustees named were the same as those referred to in the application for a charter.

At the Conference of 1855, Paradise Mission was separated from Cherry Valley Circuit, and left to be supplied by the presiding elder. James E. Meredith was appointed to Stroudsburg.

On the 18th of June, 1855, the old frame church, with the lot of ground on which it stood, was sold by the "Stroudsburg Methodist Episcopal Church" to James T. Palmer and William E. Palmer for the sum of six hundred dollars. The deed was signed by Robert Boys, president, and Charles R. Andre, secretary. Ferdinand Dutot and James H. Walton were the witnesses.

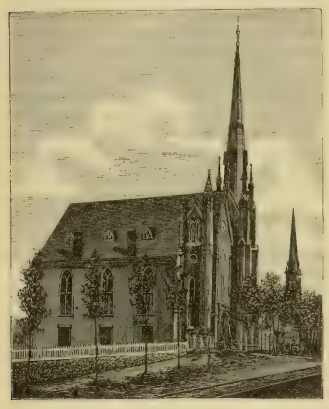
In 1856, James E. Meredith was reappointed to Stroudsburg and Francis D. Eagan was appointed to Paradise. In 1857, Pennel Coombe was appointed presiding elder. In 1857 and 1858, George W. MacLaughlin was pastor of Stroudsburg. In 1859, John Chew Thomas was appointed to Stroudsburg, but after exerting a holy influence upon both church and community, he died very suddenly on the 18th day of January, 1860.

James Farmer Reynolds was taken from Cherry Valley Circuit to serve the church in Stroudsburg until the close of the Conference year.

In 1860, David W. Bartine was appointed presiding elder of North Philadelphia District.

Charles I. Thompson was appointed pastor of Stroudsburg.

In 1862 and 1863 Thomas A. Fernley was pastor of Stroudsburg. In 1864 and 1865 William J. Paxson was pastor. In 1865 Joseph Mason succeeded D. W. Bartine as presiding elder.



During the year the church debt, which had been steadily increasing for a number of years until it had reached the sum of one thousand dollars, was entirely paid. In 1866 John H.

Alday was appointed preacher in charge. His ministrations were blessed with the greatest revival ever known in that section of country.

In 1867 John H. Alday was reappointed to Stroudsburg. His pastoral relations, which had been greatly blessed of God, terminated with the Conference of 1868.

In 1868 and 1869 William M. Ridgway was the pastor of Stroudsburg. In 1869 William Cooper was appointed presiding elder of North Philadelphia District.

The question of enlarging the old church, or building a new one, was carefully considered by the official members in the latter part of Brother Ridgway's first year and the early part of his second; until the conclusion was reached that an enlargement of the old edifice, in an entirely different style of architecture, was an absolute necessity. In June, 1869, the work of remodeling was begun; the old front walls were torn down, the roof taken off, the floor of the main audience-room raised, an addition of fourteen feet made to the front of the building and a recess of eight feet added to the rear centre. The work was pushed forward with vigor, under the superintendence of a building committee, consisting of the pastor and R. S. Staples, C. D. Broadhead and D. Keller, Esqs., until the new roof was put on and the lecture-room was ready for occupancy; the congregation in the mean time, by the courtesy of the county commissioners, worshipping in the court-house.

At the Conference of 1870 W. M. Ridgway was appointed to Mariner's Bethel, Philadelphia. In 1879 John S. Janes McConnell was appointed pastor of Stroudsburg. Early in the year the work of remodeling, which had been suspended when the lecture-room was finished, was resumed. The committee appointed to superintend the work consisted of the pastor, S. S. Dreher, J. B. Storm and C. D. Broadhead. They labored under many difficulties, caused by circumstances which had not entered into the calculations of the trustees when the enterprise was inaugurated.

These, however, were surmounted and its congregation entered the house free of debt in July, 1871. The building was again remodeled and beautified under the ministrations of Rev. W. H. Elliott. The pastors who have in succession been in charge of the church since Rev. J. S. J. McConnell are Revs. George W. F. Graff, J. F. Chaplin, G. W. Carroll, J. F. Meridith, W. H. Elliott, George Heacock and John Dyson, the present incumbent. The trustees are Hon. S. S. Dreher, Hon. John B. Storm, Nicholas Ruster, Wm. Ackerman, Reuben Miller, Joseph Wallace, Simon Barry and C. D. Brodhead. The present class-leaders are Dr. Nelson Peck, George W. Mount, C. D. Brodhead. The superintendent of the Sabbath-school is C. D. Brodhead. The membership roll embraces three hundred names.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. — The principal instrument in founding the Presbyterian Church in Stroudsburg was the Rev. Jacob T. Field. In the spring of 1827 Mr. Field had obtained a commission from the American Home Missionary Society to labor for a period of two months in Mauch Chunk and vicinity. Upon arriving there, however, he found the ground already occupied. Relinquishing his original design, he came on a visit to Stroudsburg, where he had some relatives residing. Being solicited to remain here and labor in the ministry, he wrote to the board and had his commission changed to this field. He also solicited and obtained the assistance of the Mr. Solomon Carpenter, then noted for the success of his evangelistic labors. Under the united efforts of these two apostolic men an extraordinary religious interest was awakened throughout the entire community. The way seemed now prepared for the organization of a church; and, accordingly, on the 15th of August, 1827, a church was formally organized, consisting of eleven persons, to be connected with the Presbytery of Newton. The names of these original members were as follows, viz.: Jane Andrew, Jane Drake, Eliza Bidleman, Rachel Riter, Eliza Wilson, Elizabeth Miller, Ellen Postens, Amos Miller, Peter Landers, Hannah Morgan and Joseph Kerr, of whom Joseph Kerr and Amos Miller were duly elected and set apart as ruling elders and constituted, with the officiating minister, the first session.

On the expiration of the time to which his commission extended Mr. Field left Stroudsburg, and in the spring of 1828 his place was supplied by Mr. John M. Dickey.

After an interval of some months, during which the church was visited several times by the Rev. John Gray, of Easton, Pa., and the communion administered and a number of members admitted, the Rev. Samuel Sturgeon arrived and acted as stated supply during the years 1829 and 1830.

In the month of November, 1831, the Rev. Charles Tappan came and supplied the church regularly until the summer of 1832. In the month of November of this year the Rev. Jacob T. Field was again engaged to supply this church in conjunction with that at Smithfield. He commenced his labors on the 17th day of the month and continued to labor with great acceptance and success from that time on till the spring of 1837. During this period, of some four years and a half, the church of Stroudsburg made rapid progress and was enlarged by an addition of more than forty members.

In the spring of 1837 Mr. Field left Stroudsburg, and his place was supplied, during the following winter, by the Rev. Benjamin I. Lowe. In the spring of 1838 he returned to his old charge and was regularly installed pastor of the United Churches of Stroudsburg and Smithfield June 26, 1838. In this charge he continued to labor until the fall of 1840, when he relinquished the work of the ministry altogether. His pastoral relation was dissolved by the Presbytery on the 5th of October, 1841.

In the winter of 1840 the church at Stroudsburg was supplied for a period of three months by the Rev. John McNair.

In the month of May, 1841, the services of the Rev. Baker Johnson were secured as stated supply for the churches of Smithfield and Stroudsburg. This arrangement continued until the spring of 1844, when the church of Stroudsburg resolved that they would endeavor to secure the services of a minister who should devote the whole of his time to them. They, accordingly, in the fall of 1844, called the Rev. William Scribner, who was ordained and installed by the Presbytery of Newton, then in session at Stroudsburg, on the 13th day of November, 1844. This relation continued until the spring of 1849, when Mr. Scribner resigned, and the former union with Smithfield was renewed, under the pastoral care of the Rev. Mr. Johnson. Mr. Johnson was formally installed as pastor of Stroudsburg Church on the 28th day of November, 1849, and continued to labor as such until the spring of 1853.

In the spring of 1854 a call was extended to the Rev. J. Edwin Miller, which he accepted, and, on the 13th day of June following, he was installed pastor by a committee of the Presbytery of Newton. Mr. Miller, in 1860, resigned, and was succeeded by the Rev. Myron Barrett, who labored as stated supply for two years. On the removal of Mr. Barrett he was succeeded by the Rev. George F. Cain, now of Williamsport, Pa. He was ordained to the office of the holy ministry on the 28th of May, 1863, by the Presbytery of Newton, and, on the same day, installed as pastor of this church.

After the retiracy of Mr. Cain, the Rev. Benjamin Smith Everett was called to succeed him, and began his labors on the 1st day of July of that year. On the 17th of November following Mr. Everett was installed pastor, he having been received as a member of the Presbytery of Newton, at its stated meeting, the preceding October. This pastoral relation was dissolved on the 20th day of January, 1869, Mr. Everett having received and accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church of Montclair, N. J.

The church remained vacant until the 14th day of August, 1869, when the Rev. William H. Dinsmore, of Mahanoy City, Pa., was unanimously chosen to fill the pastoral office. Mr. Dinsmore, having accepted the call, was duly installed, though no record of the installation services can be found. He was released from his pastoral charge on the 17th day of February, 1876, and removed to Deerfield, N. J., to the church of which place he had been called.

The church being now vacant, a congregational meeting was held on the 17th day of March, 1876, for the purpose of electing a pastor, when R. M. Wallace was unanimously chosen. Having accepted the call tendered him, he was duly installed on the 4th day of May, 1876.

Joseph Kerr and Amos Miller were the first ruling elders in the Stroudsburg Presbyterian Church, they having been elected, ordained and installed on the 15th day of August, 1827, the day of the organization of the church. Of these, Mr. Kerr has usually been called "The Father of the Church," for the reason that he took a more prominent part in the starting of the church, and was for a longer period of time identified with it, in an official capacity, than any other. He served for more than forty years in the capacity of an elder; was, for many years, the president of the board of trustees, and collected most of the money used in the support of the pastor, and in the erection of the first church edifice. He was generally sent, in the earlier periods of its history, to represent his church in the ecclesiastical courts. His colleague, Mr. Miller, after serving, as an elder, for a period of nearly eleven years, was, at his own request, excused from acting any longer in that capacity. On the 29th day of December, 1832, Messrs. Samuel Drake and James Bush were elected additional elders, and were ordained and installed as such on the afternoon of the same day. Joseph V. Wilson and Daniel S. Hollinshead, having been elected, were ordained and installed as elders November 22, 1835. Dr. William P. Vail was ordained and installed June 16, 1838. Jeremy Mackey, July 23, 1843, and John Malvin, who had previously been an elder in Smithfield, was elected and installed as such, here, on the 22d of September, 1847. Jeremy Mackey, who had previously removed from the place, and served some time as an elder at Smithfield, returned; and, having connected himself with the church here, was re-elected and installed on the 22d of April, 1860. William F. Bush was ordained and installed November 24, 1861, and Messrs. J. W. Cole, James B. Hull and Stephen Holmes, Jr., were elected on the 27th of May, 1874. They were ordained and installed on the 14th day of June following. Jesse R. Smith, Peter Williams and E. H. Weeks were also elected and ordained as deacons at this time. Of these, Mr. Malvin, next to Mr. Kerr, served as an elder the longest time. He was a member of the session for more than thirty-five years. The next longest service is that of Judge Mackey, who was an elder (except a few years) since 1843, until his death. William F. Bush has served for many years, as also Dr. William P. Vail.

The following persons have served the congregation, in the capacity of trustees, from a period shortly after its organization up to the present time. They were elected to the office in the order in which they are here named, viz.: Joseph Kerr, Joseph V. Wilson, Michael H. Dreher, Samuel Drake, Jr., Abraham Rinker, Dr. William P. Vail, Daniel S. Hollinshead, John Malvin, Jeremy Mackey, John Teel, William C. Larzelier, George H. Miller, George Malvin, Robert R. Depuy, Daniel Peters, James A. Pauli, George H. Dreher, William Hollinshead, Jesse R. Smith, Jacob L. Wyckoff, William F. Bush, Robert Brown, George Kern, Thomas McIlhaney, James Smiley, Jeremiah Williams, Melchoir Dreher, H. S. Wagner, James H. McCarty, M. L. Hutchinson, A. C. Jansen and Peter S. Williams. To these gentlemen the church is indebted for the management of its temporal affairs, hitherto.

Church Edifices.—The first meetings of the congregation for religious worship were held in an old barn, of large dimensions, which covered the ground on which the Lutheran Church now stands. The three days' meeting conducted by Messrs. Campbell, Candee and Talmage was held here. The congregation soon removed to the old Stone Academy, afterward called "The Seminary," on Green Street. This continued to be used until some time in the beginning of 1834, when the old church edifice, on Sarah Street, was completed and ready for occupancy. The lot on which this first church edifice owned by the congregation stands was donated by the liberality of Daniel Stroud, Esq., and the requisite steps taken to put up a building in the month of December, 1832. Joseph Kerr, Joseph V. Wilson, Michael H. Dreher, Samuel Drake, Jr. and Abraham Rinker were the trustees and building committee, and they collected the funds, gathered the materials and pushed the matter forward, during the year 1833, until the house was completed and ready for use, at the opening of the year 1834.

Here the church maintained its worship, and enjoyed its ordinances for a period of over twenty-six years, when, in consequence of the growth of the town and the enlargement of the congregation, the place became too strait for them; and, accordingly, on the 11th day of June, 1860, at a meeting of the trustees, a committee was appointed, consisting of James A. Pauli, William Hollinshead, Daniel Peters, Jeremy Mackey and George Dreher, "to make inquiry in relation to a suitable lot whereon to erect a new Presbyterian Church." Nothing effectual was done until the 14th day of February, 1867, when a congregational meeting was held, at which the following, among other resolutions, were adopted, viz.: "Resolved, 1st. That we will, now, proceed to build a Church, either on Main Street, or as near to it as possible. 2d. That A. Reeves Jackson, Jeremy Mackey, Robert Brown, M. H. Dreher and Jacob L. Wyckoff be a building committee. 3d. That Stephen Holmes, M. H. Dreher and John Malvin be a committee on subscriptions." Thus officered and equipped, the enterprise moved forward rapidly and energetically, through the spring and summer of 1867.

The church edifice was, at length, completed and dedicated to the worship of the Triune God on the 8th day of October, 1868, with but comparatively a small debt on it. This debt was very materially reduced by well-directed efforts set on foot during the ministry of the Rev. Mr. Dinsmore.

Rev. Dr. Wallace resigned the charge of the Stroudsburg Church during the spring of 1884, and the congregation having heard Mr. S. G. Hutchinson, of the Senior Class of Princeton Theological Seminary, extended to him a unanimous call. The call was accepted, and he was ordained to the gospel ministry and formally installed over the church during the September meeting of Presbytery in 1884. Under his pastorate the attendance at the Sabbath services have largely increased. Within little more than a year over thirty have connected themselves with the church, and the outlook is promising and encouraging.

The Society of Friends.—About the year 1826 a separation occurred between the Orthodox and the Hicksite branches of the Society of Friends. The latter erected, about the year 1830, a plain frame meeting-house opposite the Methodist Episcopal Church, on Main Street, from which they removed, in 1872, to quarters more commodious and comfortable.

The latter meeting-house is located on the corner of Franklin and Sarah Streets, a brick structure fitted with every convenience. The Society of Friends in Stroudsburg was formed of such earnest members as John Flagler, John Palmer, Catherine P. Foulke and others, many of whom have long since passed away. Mrs. Foulke still survives, and is the only recognized speaker at the present time. The descendants of the early members have embraced the faith of their fathers, and are now the chief supporters of the society.

St. John's Lutheran Church.—On Sunday, December 23, 1866, Rev. D. M. Henkel organized a congregation of twelve male members in the court-house at Stroudsburg, under the title of "St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church of Stroudsburg, Pa." Trustees were appointed by the court, John S. Fisher, Frederick Kiser and John Edinger being among the first officers of the organization. A site was secured for the church on the west side of Pocono Street, north of Main, and on the 4th of July, 1868, the corner-stone was laid with fitting ceremonies, Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg delivering an address suited to the occasion. On Sunday, the 24th of October, 1869, the church was consecrated to the service of God by appropriate exercises; the sermon being preached by Dr. C. W. Schaeffer, of Philadelphia. In the afternoon services were conducted by Rev. A. T. Geissenhainer, also of Philadelphia, and in the evening by Rev. Mr. Belfour, of Easton. Confirmation and communion were also held on this Sunday.

At the close of the year 1870, Rev. Mr. Henkel presented his resignation, and Rev. G. W. Marriott was elected to serve the church for one year. Rev. John Kohler became pastor during the latter part of the year 1873, and during his pastorate the entire debt of the church was liquidated. Rev. John W. Mattern, the present pastor, was called December 1, 1882. Within the last few years the edifice has been beautifully repaired, and at present is one of the most attractive churches in the borough.

For many years the organization was burdened with a heavy debt, but at present its finances are in excellent condition, it being not only free of debt, but through the munificence of the late Frederick Kiser, the recipient of a legacy of fourteen hundred dollars. It has a membership of about fifty, and its prospects for the future are hopeful and encouraging.

Zion's Reformed Church.—The congregation was organized May 19, 1882. Prior to that time several efforts at organization had been made, all of which failed. At the May meeting of the East Pennsylvania Classis the congregation thus formed was constituted a mission and Rev. G. W. Kershaw recommended as pastor. On August 6, 1882, he was duly installed as pastor of the congregation, which worshipped at first in the court-house. But steps were taken early to secure a church building, and a lot was finally purchased on Green Street. Ground was broken in September, 1883, and the corner stone laid with appropriate ceremonies on August 1, 1883. The work progressed rapidly until January, when, the building being inclosed, labor was suspended until the following summer, after which it was pushed toward completion, and the church was dedicated November 16, 1884. The building is a neat brick structure in Gothic style, with tower at the side. Its dimensions are thirty-six by sixty, with a front of forty-two feet of pressed brick. In front and on the sides are large cathedral glass windows. The interior is finished in hard wood, ceiling of ornamental wood-work, the principal rafters exposed and the entire ceiling covered with yellow pine lining. The church is heated by steam. The light is furnished by two large gas-burning reflectors in the ceiling. The seating capacity is four hundred and the entire cost about eight thousand dollars. The building committee were Messrs. Jacob K. Shafer, Samuel Hood, H. T. Van Iderstine, J. L. Bowen and Jerome S. Williams. The present membership is fifty-five.

CEMETERIES.

The Stroudsburg Cemetery.—The application for the incorporation of the Stroudsburg Cemetery was made to the judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Monroe County by the following gentlemen: Stroud Burson, Silas

V. Drake, Simon Barry, Thomas M. McIlhany, S. J. Hollinshead, Wm. T. Baker, Robert Brown, R. S. Staples, Edward Brown, J. H. Stroud, John Edinger, A. Reeves Jackson, Wm. Davis, Joseph Troch, David Keller, John De Young, Jeremy Mackey.

The decree of incorporation was granted May 26, 1864, and at a subsequent election the following officers were chosen: William Davis, president; A. Reeves Jackson, secretary; Richard L. Staples, treasurer; and Samuel S. Dreher, James Boys, Jacob L. Wyckoff, Wm. S. Rees, A. Reeves Jackson, Richard L. Staples and William Davis, managers. A proposal was received from Jacob Singmaster, Esq., suggesting the gift of a lot of about seven acres west of the borough, on condition that the sum of one thousand dollars was expended in fencing and improving the ground, which proposition was accepted. The work of improvement was completed and the demand for lots so great as to render an addition to the grounds necessary. A piece of ground was therefore purchased of Henry Singmaster in 1879, embracing seven acres and forty-two perches, and added to the original tract, the whole being substantially fenced and laid out in plots. The location of this cemetery is picturesque and attractive. Well-kept walks lead in all directions, while trees, shrubs and flowering plants add to the beauty of the spot. Many graceful and imposing monuments mark the last resting places of former citizens of Stroudsburg.

A cemetery situated on the road to East Stroudsburg, and midway between the two boroughs, now in disuse, was purchased and devoted to purposes of burial at the beginning of the present century. Among the old families whose names appear here are those of Staples, Christian, Bush, Dutot, Robeson, La Bar, Bender, Morris, Burnet, Bartron, Hollinshead, Stroud, Kerr, Werkheiser, Boys, Bickley, Loder, Burson, Starbird, Rees, Brown, Darling and Ransbury. Special interest attaches to this spot as being the last resting-place of Jacob Stroud, the founder of Stroudsburg, and his wife, Elizabeth, a daughter of John McDowel.

A burial-place owned by the Society of Friends (Orthodox), and now abandoned, lies at the west end of the borough. Among the families who have used it as a place of burial are those of Stokes, Postens, Farner, Hallock, Bell, Brown and Jansen.

The Hicksite branch of the society have also a burial-ground within the limits of the borough, which is used at present. The families of Brown, Sites, Palmer, Flagler, Wintermute, Mellick, Miller, Smiley, Phillips, Walton, Foulke and Rafferty bury within this inclosure.

SOCIETIES.

Barger Lodge, No. 325, Free and Accepted Masons.—Barger Lodge was organized on the 6th of October, 1858, and the charter granted by Hon. Henry M. Phillips, then Right Worshipful Master of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. The charter members were Dr. A. Reeeves Jackson, Hon. John De Young, Samuel Mellick, Charles D. Brodhead, William T. Baker, Jacob Stauffer, Robert W. Swink, Abram Edinger, Isaac S. Case, James H. Walton, James A. Pauli, Charles S. Palmer.

Mr. Phillips, of the Grand Lodge of the State, not being present, N. F. Marsh, D. D. G. Master, acted in his stead.

The following members of the fraternity on this occasion composed the Grand Lodge: William Barger, P. G. M., acting as G. M.; R. A. Oakford, S. G. W.; E. P. Kingsbury, J. G. W.; E. C. Lynde, G. Sec.; N. F. Marsh, G. M.; Abram Edinger, S. G. D.; James A. Pauli, J. G. D.; Samuel Mellick, G. Tyler.

Deputations from the various lodges at Mauch Chunk, Easton and Mount Bethel, Pa., were present and assisted in the ceremonies. The lodge being instituted, the following members were elected and installed as its first officers: A. Reeves Jackson, W. M.; John De Young, S. W.; William T. Baker, J. W.; Robert W. Swink, Sec.; Samuel Mellick, Treasurer. A hall was leased, fitted and furnished and the meetings of the lodge continued to be held at that place until the 9th of June, 1873, when more commodious rooms were secured and occupied. A disastrous fire on the 19th of July, 1885, rendered another change necessary, when the present quarters in Greenwald's Hall, on Franklin Street, were secured. In 1866 a committee was appointed to secure a lot for building, and a site on the southwest corner of Elizabeth and Centre Streets being recommended, was accordingly purchased. This lot was released for ten years to J. S. Williams, who again leased twenty-five feet of the property to William S. Flory. A committee was appointed to erect a building conjointly with Mr. Flory, the third floor to be devoted to the uses of the lodge. The third interest was then sold and a lease of the hall secured for ten years, after which it was furnished at a cost of two thousand seven hundred dollars and dedicated on the 10th of February, 1873. In April, 1882, the building was purchased by the lodge and occupied until the fire above mentioned, which also occasioned the loss of furniture, regalia and many valuable books and papers. The erection of a new building is, however, speedily contemplated. The present officers are Joseph H. Shull, Worshipful Master; Edwin Shafer, Senior Warden; James W. Cooke, Junior Warden; Edward Baltz, Treasurer; Amzi Le Bar, Secretary; James Mahlon, Senior Deacon; Cicero Gearhart, Junior Deacon; A. B. Wyckoff, Senior Master of Ceremonies; Hiram W. Kistler, Junior Master of Ceremonies; William C. Drake, Pursuivant; J. B. Woodward, Chaplain; Robert Thomas, Tyler; Representative to the Grand Lodge, Peter S. Williams; The trustees are Benjamin S. Jacoby, Jacob K. Shafer, Peter J. Young, William Dreher. The Past Masters are James A. Pauli, Hon. Samuel S. Dreher, William T. Baker, George W. De Long, J. S. Williams, Benjamin S. Jacoby, Alonzo B. Shafer, Hon. C. D. Brodhead, Peter S. Williams, George E. Stauffer, William S. Barger, Amzi Le Bar, Archibald A. Dinsmore. The present membership is one hundred and ten.

Port Penn Lodge, No. 136, I. O. of O. F.—This lodge was instituted February 13, 1846, by John Dickson, D. D. G. M., of Easton, Pa., its charter members being Samuel Haydon, Joseph J. Posten, Henry M. La Bar, M. G. Grattan, William Meyer and others. Its meetings are held at Odd-Fellows' Hall, on Main Street, on Saturday night. Its present officers are Isaiah Slutter, N. G.; Frank Norcross, V. G.; John E. Snyder, Secretary; N. H. Shafer, Assistant Secretary; Edward Baltz, Treasurer; Joseph L. Bowers, Representative to Grand Lodge.

Improved Order of Red Men.—Minisink Tribe, No. 195, of this order, was organized February 17, 1873, its charter members being B. F. Morey, Samuel Hood, S. Fried, C. Mick, J. T. Palmer, Wm. Appenzeller, Jacob Michaels, Wm. B. Bell, Lewis Kenist, N. H. Shafer, Fred. W. Born, D. R. Brown, Evi Rosenkrans, Ed. Singer, P. Born, J. K. Shafer, J. S. Fisher, Uriah Slutter, C. R. Andre, N. Ruster, S. Featherman, E. Peck, A. O. Greenwald, V. Kautz, E. Smiley and Ed. Baltz.

Its first officers were Simon Freed, Sachem; D. S. Lee, Senior Sagamore; H. B. Hitchcock, Junior Sagamore; B. F. Morey, Prophet; J. S. Brown, Chief of Records; P. Born, Keeper of Wampum.

The Past Sachems are Simon Fried, B. F. Morey, M. D. Heller, J. S. Fisher, M. Miller, J. Appenzeller, D. G. Palmer, Chas. D. Wallace, Ed. Fisher, U. Slutter, S. S. Williams, J. W. Cook, Ed. Baltz, N. Shafer, P. Born, F. Born, C. Mick, S. M. Dreher, J. Mick, M. Evens, M. B. Turner, J. Gaugher; B. F. Morey, Past Great Sachem.

Its officers for 1886 are A. Heller, Sachem; Ed. R. Wallace, Senior Sagamore; T. C. Brown, Junior Sagamore; S. M. Dreher, Prophet; S. S. Williams, Chief of Records; Chas. D. Wallace, Keeper of Wampum.

Stroudsburg Fire Department.—The citizens of Stroudsburg feeling the necessity for some systematic protection against fire, a company was organized and negotiations were opened for the purchase of apparatus. Among the members of the first company were M. B. Postens, Jno. Stokes, Darius Dreher, Peter Born, Frank Landis and Mason Tock. M. B. Posten was elected captain, and Jno. Stokes, president, the latter being appointed a committee of one to purchase the apparatus. He bought a hand-engine in Philadelphia, which was christened "The Humane," the company being known by the same name. In 1865 the name of the organization was changed from "Humane" to "Phœnix," and a larger hand-engine was purchased from a fire company at Easton. In 1867 the company, desiring a building in which to keep their apparatus and hold their meetings, organized a lottery for the purpose of raising money to defray the expense of building. The enterprise was a success. A lot was purchased by the company, on Franklin Street, near the court-house, and a substantial brick building, with a tower and bell, erected on the same. The property is owned by the company, which is a chartered institution, and is a volunteer company of great merit. In 1871 the borough purchased a Clapp & Jones third-class steamer, of forty-five hundred pounds weight. Besides the steamer, the borough owns two hose-carriages, about one thousand feet of linen hose of the Eureka make, and a Silsby steam heater, by means of which the hall and apparatus room is warmed and about ten pounds of steam is always kept in the engine. The attachments between the heater and the engine are automatic and require no attention whatever when an alarm of fire is given. The company have, at their own expense, added to the engine a Prunty relief valve and a shut-off and spray nozzle. By means of the last two attachments, the nozzle-men have entire control of the stream, shutting it off and turning it on at their pleasure. This enables them to change their positions, move the hose, pass through buildings not on fire, ascend and descend ladders, and in many ways gives them better control of the fire. Besides, all undue pressure is taken off of the hose. The engineer now need not watch the stream and be constantly stopping the engine. When the nozzle-man turns off the stream the relief valve takes the water and passes it back into the pumps. This is kept up until the stream is again turned on at the nozzle. The company also have an automatic arrangement by means of which the gas in the apparatus room is lighted whenever there is an alarm of fire at night, and they are now experimenting on an apparatus to ring the bell on the tower automatically. The company consists of thirty able-bodied men, of which J. G. Keller is chief; N. H. Shafer, foreman; Wm. Posten, assistant foreman; Geo. F. Dreher, engineer; Charles Schoch, assistant engineer; H. Dodd, fireman; H. S. Wolfe, president; J. J. White, vice-president; A. J. Van O. Linda, secretary; Geo. Shackelton, assistant secretary; and M. E. Miller, treasurer. J. G. Keller is now serving his eleventh year as chief officer of the company. T. C. Brown and H. G. Huston are the only charter members now in the organization. The water supply as furnished by the Stroudsburg Water Company is very inadequate, the pipes being too small to supply the engine. Aside from that, the town is well supplied with water, having three creeks—the Pocono, on the west; the McMichael, on the south and the Brodhead, on the east—and two races from which the steamer can draw, as necessity requires.

The Stroudsburg Library.—The Stroudsburg Library was organized about the year 1833. The organization was effected mainly through the exertions of John Jordan. Liberal contributions of books were made by those who took an interest in the project, principally by Mr. Jordan, Daniel Stroud, Rev. J. T. Field and Peter S. Hollinshead, whose names appear on the blank leaves of several standard works in the library. The privilege of putting up a building was generously granted by the Orthodox Friends on their meeting-house lot, where it still stands.

The number of volumes is about one thousand three hundred. The taste for sensational reading has perverted the reading taste, within the past three years, so as to cause the patronage of the library books to be too small to pay the expenses of keeping it open. It has therefore been temporarily closed.

Company F, Thirteenth Regiment National Guards of Pennsylvania.—This company which has its headquarters and armory located at Stroudsburg, having been in existence but little more than one year, has necessarily but a brief history. It was organized by Rogers L. Burnett, a graduate of West Point in the spring of 1884, who, discerning the material for a good company in Stroudsburg, communicated with Colonel Hitchcock, the commander of the regiment in Scranton, and was by him instructed, after a season of discouragement and disappointment, to proceed in his laudable endeavor. The company was formed on the 31st of December, 1884, under the supervision of Colonel Hitchcock and other regimental officers, and at once proceeded to drill for participation in the ceremonies attending President Cleveland's inauguration. Mr. Burnett was chosen captain; Harry S. Wolf, first lieutenant; and John B. Williams, second lieutenant; and the following non-commissioned officers appointed in the order named: Sergeants, M. E. Miller, James Lynch, John Decker, Frank C. Kerr, Ray Brittain; Corporals, Calvin De Young, George Brown, Thomas Spragle, Irwin Rhodes, Theodore Murray, Bert Stanton, George Michaels and Frank Posten, the last-named corporal being also color bearer. On the occasion of the inaugural ceremonies the company received complimentary mention from their commander for excellence in drill. The company participated in the brigade encampment at Mt. Gretna Park, Lebanon County, in July, 1885. Captain Burnett tendered his resignation, which having been accepted, John B. Williams was unanimously chosen to fill the position, and Sergeant Frank C. Kerr was elected second lieutenant. Sergeant Miller had meanwhile been promoted to the first lieutenancy, made vacant by the resignation of Lieutenant Wolfe. The company is now in a very promising condition, its organization being as follows:

Officers.—Captain, John B. Williams; First Lieutenant, M. E. Miller; Second Lieutenant, Frank C. Kerr; Sergeants, James Lynch, Ray Brittain, Calvin De Young, Theodore Murray, George Brown; Corporals, Irwin Rhodes, Thomas Spragle, Bert Stanton, Horace Heston, John Gordon, Dimmick Edinger, Edward Nixon; and Will H. Ramsey, Color Corporal.

Seiple, James Schoch, Harry Tock, R. Wolff, John Walter, Syd. Walton, George Born, James Zabriski, H. Gordon, Joseph Hill, Dimmick Posten, S. W. Lincor, G. H. Terry, Homer Kinney, George Hufford, John Decker, Frank Posten, Howard Hill, Sam Dreher and Joseph Taylor, drummer.

WADSWORTH POST, No. 150, G. A. R.—This post was organized by Department Commander John M. Vanderslice, on the 14th of November, 1879, its charter members being O. C. Jansen, R. W. Reynolds, Charles Yetter, Wilson Pierson, Josephus Williams, M.D., P. S. Williams, J. S. Williams, F. Knighton, D.D., H. B. Hitchcock, Harry Wolfe, W. R. Bennett, S. S. Lee, Stephen Giersch, B. F. Dungan, Solomon Kintner, Edward Nivel, John McNeal.

The post for some time occupied the Keller building in Stroudsburg, but for the past five years has held its meetings in Williams' Hall. It numbers ninety-six members, is in a very satisfactory condition financially, and in every respect prosperous. Its roster for 1886 is as follows: Henry Puterbaugh, Post Commander; Caleb Rinker, Senior Vice-Commander; George Mount, Junior Vice-Commander; Harry Wolfe, Adjutant; A. C. Jansen, Quartermaster; A. Le Bar, M.D., Surgeon; John L. Staples, Chaplain; J. N. Shively, Officer of the Day; William Gordon, Officer of the Guard; Lewis Walters, Quartermaster-Sergeant; John S. Staples, Sergeant-major. The Past Post Commanders are A. C. Jansen, Charles Yetter, P. S. Williams, Harry Wolfe. The council of administration is as follows: A. C. Jansen, W. R. Bennett and P. S. Williams.

HENRY SINGMASTER.—On the 19th day of September, 1749, the ship "Patience," Hugh Steel, captain, brought to this country two hundred and seventy passengers from the Duchy of Würtemberg. Among these was John Adam Zaugmeister, who settled in Bucks County. His son Adam, when a young man, went from Bucks County to Millerstown, Lehigh County, Pa., where he obtained employment in the tannery of the Rev. Jacob Van Buskirk, whose daughter, Lydia, he afterwards married. Mr. Van Buskirk was one of the early pastors of the old Trappe Church, and is buried at Hackensack, New Jersey. After his death Adam Singmaster bought his farm, May 27, 1810, containing one hundred and four acres and one hundred and twenty-nine perches, for the sum of two thousand five hundred and ninety-five pounds. He settled thereon and reared a family of seven sons—John, Jacob, Reuben, Samuel, Henry, William and Charles—and one daughter, Sarah, who married William Miller, and resided at Allentown, Pa.

Adam Singmaster was one of the grand jurors of the first Court of General Quarter Sessions of the peace held at the borough of Northampton, for the county of Lehigh, November 30, 1813. He died July 28, 1820. Jacob, his son, born January 1, 1805, became one of the pioneers of the tanning business, and started out in Juniata County, where he built for himself a large tannery. He was the founder of Tannersville, this county, where he built two large steam tanneries. He also built one at Stroudsburg, where he died, a bachelor, in March, 1874, leaving a large estate, which he had accumulated during a long, active and industrious life. He was a man of high character, a useful and influential citizen, and for many years one of the prominent business men of Monroe County.

Samuel Singmaster, another son of Adam Singmaster, resides in Iowa, where he and his sons are engaged in stock-raising and importing horses from France. He owns a great deal of land, some of which he purchased directly from the Indians.

William Singmaster, another of Adam Singmaster's sons, was one of the earliest settlers of Missouri, where he owned considerable land. During the gold excitement he joined a company of his neighbors, who, with their ox-teams, crossed the Rocky Mountains into California, where they engaged in gold-digging. A few months after his arrival there he died, a bachelor, and was buried where Sacramento City is now situated. Charles and Reuben also lived in Missouri. John was the only one of the brothers who remained in Lehigh County. After his father's death he moved upon the old homestead, where he engaged in farming and tanning until he died, December 5, 1877, at the age of eighty. He left a number of descendants.

Henry Singmaster was born on the homestead, in Lower Macungie township, Lehigh County, October 19, 1813. He passed his earlier years in the family of his sister, Mrs. William Miller, in Philadelphia, where he received an excellent education. For a few years he clerked in the store of his brother-in-law, in Philadelphia. He then learned the tanning trade with his brother John in Macungie. Subsequently he joined his brother Jacob in the tanning business at Licking Creek, Juniata County. His brothers Samuel and Charles were also interested with Jacob at that place. At a later period the business was carried on there by Henry Singmaster and William Miller, and upon the removal of the latter to Allentown, Pa., Henry ran the tannery enterprise alone, conducting in connection therewith a store, farm and saw-mill at the same point. He subsequently engaged in farming in Bucks County. On March 21, 1871, upon the solicitation of his brother Jacob, he removed to Stroudsburg, Pa., for the purpose of assisting the latter in looking after his varied and extensive interests. There he continued to reside until his death, on June 7, 1885.

Henry Singmaster was a man of more than ordinary intelligence, a great reader, and possessed of a vast amount of general information, which had been accumulated during a long life by close study and extensive travel. While entertaining decided political views, and manifesting great interest in the support of the ends and principles of his party, he never aspired to public place or position. He was strongly Lutheran in his religious tendencies, and assisted in building a church of that denomination at Licking Creek. The church at Stroudsburg was also indebted to him for many liberal contributions, and it was through his influence that the large debt of the church due to the estate of Jacob Singmaster was remitted. According to the terms of his will, the residue of his estate, after the death of his wife, will pass to the Lutheran institutions at Gettysburg and Philadelphia. He led a plain, straightforward, earnest life, avoiding ostentatious display and securing the respect and confidence of all. He married Rosanna, daughter of Charles F. and Rosanna (Gibbenger) Smith, formerly of Juniata County, who now occupies the splendid family mansion at Stroudsburg erected by Jacob Singmaster, and in which her husband afterwards resided. Mrs. Singmaster's parents live at Logansport, Indiana.

WILLIAM S. REES.—September 12, 1682, a party of seventeen arrived in Philadelphia from Wales, having all purchased land in the Penn Indian purchase, in what is now Montgomery County, and among them were three Reeses,—John, Edward and Evan Rees,—and in 1780 (nearly one hundred years after), Samuel Rees, a son of Samuel Rees and grandson of Evan Rees, came into Northampton County (now Monroe), with his compass[1] (being then a young man only twenty years of age), to follow the business of surveying, and October 4, 1792, he married Rachel Stroud and returned to the place where he was born,—"Trappe," Montgomery County,—where he resided until about 1806 (and during that time was a member of the Assembly of Pennsylvania), when he returned to Stroud township (then Northampton), Monroe County, and lived on the farm left by Colonel Jacob Stroud to his daughter, Rachel Rees (née Stroud), about one mile west of Stroudsburg, and during most of the time was a justice of the peace, (where Sheffield Reynolds now lives, on what is now known as the Snydersville road).

The frame house and barn that he built on the place are still there, intact. On that farm he raised a family of ten children. Hannah, who married Daniel E. La Bar, a surgeon and an uncle of the present Judge J. D. La Bar, of the Monroe courts. She, Hannah, died at Delavan, Wis., in 1856. Stroud, married to Christiana Butz, whose grandfather, Michael Butz, came to America from Germany about 1683–84 and also settled in Montgomery County. He died 1872, aged seventy-seven years, in Iowa.

Elizabeth died single. Julia Ann, who married and is now living at Highland Park (near Chicago), Illinois. She was born February 4, 1799, and is now in her eighty-eighth year, with good health, hearing and eyesight, and the only one of the family living now. Sally, married to Giles Slocum, of Kingston, Luzerne County, Pa., a nephew of Frances Slocum, the girl captured by the Indians when a child in the Wyoming Valley. Daniel, who was a physician and died in 1833 of typhus fever, at Stroudsburg, unmarried. Evan, a lawyer, and who died at Easton in November, 1835, unmarried. Edward, a physician; he practiced in Kentucky for twenty years, then married and settled at Jacksonville, Ill., and died there December 13, 1882, leaving a family. James Hollinshead Rees, surveyor, practiced in this county from 1830 to 1834, when he went to Chicago, Ill., and died there September 20, 1880; married, but no children. Ann Stroud Rees, who went to Wisconsin about 1850 with her mother and sister, Julia Ann, married a Dr. Sales and died in 1858, childless. Samuel Rees died at Stroudsburg January 16, 1841, in his eighty-first year. Rachel Rees died at Delavan, Walworth County, Wis., in 1854, at the advanced age of seventy-nine years, eleven months and twenty-four days.

William Stroud Rees, the present clerk of the county commissioners of Monroe County, is the eldest of twelve children of Stroud and Christiana Rees (née Butz), is the only one of the family living, and was born July 9, 1819, in a frame house that stood on the corner where the American Hotel stands, and is now the oldest citizen of the borough of Stroudsburg that was born within the limits of the borough; is now almost sixty-seven years of age and is a well-preserved man. When about ten years old, in 1829, his father moved out of the borough into Stroud township, in a house he built near the spoke factory, and now known as Goforth's, where he lived, and from the age of twelve to fifteen, or three years, worked on the farm and lived with his grandfather and grandmother on the farm. He went there on his twelfth birthday, July 9, 1831, and left there in October, 1834, and on the 7th day of June, 1835, about one month before he was sixteen, he left home, in company with his father, for Mauch Chunk, intending to learn the trade with his father, who was a carpenter. But when they got to Mauch Chunk his father went to work for George Law, who had a contract to build a bridge across the Lehigh, at Easton, and the work being of a kind too heavy for him, he started out on his own account and hired to drive a horse on the tow-path, running what they called at that time "Jersey Flickers," small coal-boats, on the Lehigh and Morris Canals, and from there, after being about six weeks on the canal and after being promoted from a tow-path lad to bowsman, went to Lower Blacks Eddy and drove horses for a packet-boat running from the Eddy, by the Delaware and Raritan Feeder, to Trenton, twenty-four miles, going to Trenton one day and returning to the Eddy the next. In August he was taken sick with fever, and after a severe attack, and after getting out, returned home in October. In December he went into what was called the Beech Woods, in the lumber woods, getting out cherry logs, and in January was caught there at the time the deep snow fell, being four and one-half feet in depth. Snowed in for some time at Naglesville (now Tobyhanna Mills).

In March, 1836, he again started out with his father and spent four years on the Lehigh between Mauch Chunk and White Haven, and at White Haven working at carpentering with his father, and in May, 1840, commenced surveying, working through the year 1840 at both carpentering and surveying, and since that time has followed the business of surveying and conveyancing. In 1841 he was appointed deputy surveyor by the surveyor-general, and held the position until 1846, and from 1843 to 1849 was deputy for James H. Stroud, the prothonotary. He was deputy treasurer for Charles Fetherman, of Monroe County, and in 1854 he was elected register and recorder of Monroe County for three years, and in 1857 was re-elected for the second term.

He got the principal part of his education in subscription schools, and after the age of twelve only by going to school in the winter; and the only schooling he got after he was sixteen years of age was four months in the winter of 1838–39, at a place in Smithfield township called "Hungry Hill," to a man named Charles Huffman, who learned the carpenter trade at the time his father did with a man named Allabach, the main builder and contractor at Stroudsburg. In 1847 he married Esther Kester, daughter of the late Peter Kester, deceased, of Hamilton, a prominent tanner in that township in his time, and the owner of what was then, and still is known as "Kester's Tannery." They had six children, and raised two of them, two daughters, the eldest of which married and died a few years ago, in Iowa. His family at the present time is himself, wife, daughter and grandson. On his mother's side he was related to the Kellers and Bossards, his grandmother being Catharine Keller and his great-grandmother Christiana Bossert.

He has been agent and surveyor for the Fire Insurance Company of Northampton County forty-five years, and has also been the same of the Bingham estate for Monroe County for about the same length of time.

CHAPTER XII.

EAST STROUDSBURG BOROUGH.

This fast-growing and enterprising town was originally a portion of Stroud township, and is situated upon the main line of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. The rapid growth of the town after the completion of the railroad warranted its application for a charter as an independent borough. In response to the appeal of its people it was incorporated as the borough of East Stroudsburg by the court on the 23d of May, 1870. The court provided that the first election should take place at the public house known as the Analomink House on the 11th day of June, 1870, when I. T. Puterbaugh was chosen the first burgess; C. E. Durfee, M. L. Hutchinson, A. W. Loder, S. P. Smith and W. N. Peters as the first Council. The land forming the site of the borough originally belonged to Daniel Brodhead, which consisted of six hundred and forty acres.

In 1856 the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad was completed, and the company built its first depot for the town, which stood at the head of what is now Washington Street. The increase of the population and business necessitated a new depot, and in 1864 the present depot and freight-house were erected. The business portion of the borough is represented by six general stores, two furniture stores, one harness manufactory and dealer, a jewelry store, a manufactory of cigars, glass manufactory, tannery, brewery, clothing, stove foundry and machine-shop, three hotels, two drug stores and two lumber-yards, and contains many fine and substantial residences of its citizens. The population is about two thousand.

OLD HOUSES.—The residence of J. R. Smith, located on Cortland Street, is the oldest house in the borough, being the old homestead of Daniel Brodhead, and, as near as can be ascertained, was built about one hundred and fifty years ago. It came into the possession of Mr. Smith by inheritance and purchase, he being the great-grandson of Daniel Brodhead.

The old stone house standing on Washington Street, below the residence of J. H. Shotwell, is the next oldest house in the borough limits, it having been the homestead of the Starbirds, the estate consisting of one hundred and fifty acres, and passed into the hands of the late Franklin Starbird, and after his death was purchased by a number of the citizens of Stroudsburg and sold off in city lots.

The Elk Horn Tannery.—This tannery, located at East Stroudsburg, was built in 1869 by the late Stephen Kistler, who conducted it until 1881, when, at his death, it came by will under the management of Stephen Kistler's sons for a period of five years. At the expiration of this time it became the property of its present owners, George L. Adams & Co.

The plant is desirably situated upon the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, and occupies about six acres of ground. The main building is two hundred and sixty-seven feet long and forty-seven feet deep, with three additions,—one sixty-two feet long and forty-two feet deep, another thirty-seven feet long and thirty-two deep, and the third twenty feet long and thirty feet deep, with extensive sheds for the storage of bark. The establishment is very complete in its mechanical appliances, and is operated by a seventy-five horse-power engine. The company are engaged in manufacturing exclusively the Union crop sole-leather, and produce one thousand and twenty-seven hides per week, giving employment to many hands. The company owns and operates another plant, which is located at Sprague ville, about five miles from East Stroudsburg, on the line of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad.

George Lincoln Adams was born in the city of Boston December 5, 1854. He obtained his preparatory education in the public schools of his native city, at South End, and was graduated at the English High School in Boston at the age of sixteen years. Inclining to a business, rather than a professional life, as a boy in the office, he entered the store of Atherton, Stetson & Co., leather dealers, and afterward continued a clerkship with that firm for some three years, until 1873, during which time he became conversant with the trade and had created a desire for a full knowledge of the manufacture of all kinds of leather. At the age of nineteen he left Boston, relinquishing his favorable connection with the firm, which at that time commanded a good salary, and for one year and a half engaged with Mr. Fulmer in his large tannery at Portland, Pa., where he worked regularly as an employe at one dollar per day. His proficiency and skill commanded the attention of his employer, and for the following nine months he served as foreman of the works at that place. For the further prosecution of this knowledge he was successively engaged at Bottle Run Tannery, near Cumberland, Md., and in the upper leather tanneries at Pittsburgh, Pa., studying their methods of manufacture for some time, when he returned to Boston with the satisfaction that he knew how to tan a hide of leather. At once upon his return, in July, 1874, his services were sought by leather manufacturers, and he accepted the position of general manager of the "Oak Valley Branch Tannery," at Sprague ville, Monroe Co., Pa., owned by Day, Wilcox & Co., of Boston, which he superintended for two years so successfully in the manufacture of high grade, marketable leather, that he was asked to add to his charge the superintendency of the "Oak Valley Tannery," at Mountain Home, in the same county. He accepted this additional responsibility and conducted both with great success until the destruction of the latter by fire, January 5, 1885. He employed some one hundred men in the tanneries, carried on a store at the Oak Valley Branch, and, during the season for peeling bark, personally looked after the detail of this branch of the business, which required many scores of men. In 1881 Mr. Adams became a partner in the firm, and the new firm has since been styled George L. Adams & Co. On March 23, 1885, the latter firm purchased the "Elk Horn Tannery" at East Stroudsburg, of the heirs of the late Stephen Kistler, since which time he has managed the affairs of the company at Spragueville and at East Stroudsburg with unabated success. His thorough knowledge of the proper methods to be employed in the manufacture of different kinds of leather to secure a high grade, and at the same time place the products of their tanneries on the market at all times, has given him an envious reputation among leather men, and, although young in years, he may be classed along with the best-informed men in the leather trade.

Geo. L. Adams

His wife, May V., whom he married October 3, 1878, is a daughter of Thomas D. Stites, formerly a contractor of Philadelphia. Their children are Lucy Hamilton and Gracie Adams.

His father, Adoniram J. Adams, a native of Washington, Vt., is the senior partner of the firm of Martin L. Hall & Co., large wholesale grocers of Boston, and at the age of thirteen years left his native State, journeyed to Boston, where he, unaided, began life and to carve out a fortune for himself as a boy clerk with Stephen Hall & Co., in the very store where he is now the head of its vast business. His mother is Harriet Lincoln Norton, whose father was a ship-builder of Maine. Her father's brother was captain of a United States steamer from New York to New Orleans, and received high credit at one time for saving the ship in mid-ocean. Later he was appointed master of the port of New Orleans, and in 1886 is the government inspector of marine boilers on the coast.

The children of Adoniram and Harriet L. Adams are Edward D., a member of the firm of Winslow, Lanier & Company, of New York, and a financier of high standing; Charles A., of Boston; Walter B., with Adams, Blodgett & Company, bankers, of Boston; Franklin, connected with F. W. & I. M. Monroe & Company, boot and shoe manufacturers, of Boston; and Hattie Adams.

Old Stores.—Thomas Stemples, a native of Wyoming County, Pa., came to East Stroudsburg in 1863, and erected the building now occupied by him, and engaged in keeping a general store. He removed his business to the stand now occupied by the Glass Company for their store, subsequently returning to his original place, where he has since conducted business. Peter Turpening and Colonel John Nice, however, previously kept stores. Mr. Stemples is now the oldest merchant of the town.

C. S. Deitrich & Co. opened the first drug-store, and it is located on what is now Crystal Street, afterwards coming into the possession of S. S. Deitrich, one of the firm of C. S. Deitrich & Co., who now keeps it.

Alexander W. Loder erected, in 1868, the building now owned by Dr. Lesch, in which he carried on mercantile business for three years, when he purchased the property on the corner of Crystal and Analomink Streets, where he erected his present store, and has carried on business since.

Match Factory.—This factory was started in 1882, by W. E. Henry & Co., who conducted it for about one year, when they sold the business to the match combination, and it was closed up.

Academy of Music.—In 1883 the property and building owned by W. E. Henry & Co. was bought for the purpose of making it a place for public entertainments by a company composed of the following parties: I. T. Puterbaugh (president), J. H. Shotwell (treasurer), M. L. Hutchinson (secretary) and Harry Puterbaugh (general manager), who, at an expense of several hundreds of dollars, have made it a desirable place for entertainments. Its seating capacity is five hundred, and it is the only public hall in the county.

Brewery.—The brewery conducted by John Burt, in rear of the depot, was built about 1867 by George L. Walker. It comprises several substantial buildings; five or six men are employed, and it has a capacity of fifteen thousand barrels per year. It is devoted especially to the brewing of ale and porter, and the manufacture of mineral waters. In connection with the brewery, John T. Burt, son of the proprietor, carries on the bottling of lager beer.

Cigar Manufactory. — A. F. Kistler started a cigar factory in 1884, and carries on a large business, employing at times in the busy season from twenty to thirty hands, manufacturing cigars for the trade. His goods are principally of fine grade, and he produces on an average, when the full force are employed, about seventy thousand per month.

Machine Shop and Foundry.—Among the industries of the borough are the Keystone Foundry and Machine Shops. These works were built by G. Stauffer & Co., and consist of one building, one hundred and eighteen by thirty-two feet, with two additions in 1881. Mr. George E. Stauffer succeeded to the business at the death of his father. The works are located on Washington Street. Broadhead Creek, running in the rear of the works, furnishes excellent power. The products of the establishment are engine, saw-mill and clothes-pin machinery, and the manufacture of plows, and general machine work, and finds employment for ten men.

East Stroudsburg Glass Company.—In 1876 a gentleman named Chase organized a stock company for the purpose of manufacturing window glass and glass caskets, and erected the buildings now owned and occupied by the present company; but the venture not proving a success, the business was suspended. In 1878 William Borrows formed a stock company, composed of citizens of the town, with a working capital of seventeen thousand dollars, with the following officers: Amzi Coolbaugh, president; J. H. Shotwell, secretary and treasurer; William Burrows, superintendent; board of directors, Amzi Coolbaugh, J. H. Shotwell, William Burrows, Stephen Kistler and Milton Yetter. In the following year, 1879, William Burrows and Milton Yetter purchased the stock and interest of the company, and have since conducted the business as a copartnership, and have employed as a working capital one hundred thousand dollars. They give employment to one hundred men and boys, and turn out daily thirty-six hundred bottles of different kinds. The location of the works furnishes excellent railroad facilities for shipping the products of the works and receiving its material, having a track of their own, which connects with the main track of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad. In addition to the East Stroudsburg works, the company operates another extensive plant at Binghamton, N. Y., with W. F. Burrows as superintendent, and W. K. Burrows as general manager, giving employment to one hundred hands. The success of Messrs. Burrows & Yetter has added materially to the growth and prosperity of East Stroudsburg. The company also have a large and well-stocked store in connection with their factory, for the benefit of their employes, and which is patronized largely by the public.

Post-Office.—The first post-office in East Stroudsburg was established in 1868, with W. N. Peters as the postmaster. It was located in the store now kept by Thomas Stemple, Mr. Peters then being its proprietor. In 1869 he sold his business and resigned in favor of Abraham Rockafellow, who removed it to his store opposite the depot, where it remained until August, 1885, when A. W. Loder was appointed, and now has it in the building adjoining his store, and referred to in his personal sketch.

Silk-Mill.—In the summer of 1885 the opportunity to locate a silk-mill here presented itself. A meeting of the citizens of Stroudsburg and East Stroudsburg was arranged, composed of Milton Yetter, I. T. Puterbaugh, J. S. Williams, John Storms, Jerome Fetherman and Joseph Wallace, for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions, which resulted in the raising of twelve thousand dollars in East Stroudsburg and eight thousand in Stroudsburg. A location was selected on Brown Street, near the bridge which spans Brodhead Creek, the dividing line of the two boroughs, and the buildings are now in course of erection, and when completed will consist of one building, two stories high, two hundred feet long and fifty feet deep, with a wing fifty feet deep and one hundred long. The works will be operated by John C. Ryle & Co., and will be devoted exclusively to the production of spool-silk and will give employment to four hundred operators.

Star Glass-Works.—These works were built in 1881, for the purpose of manufacturing glass-ware, by a stock company composed of Geo. E. Stauffer, president; C. L. Rhodes, secretary and treasurer; and Joseph Westcott, superintendent. After operating for a year it was leased to Heller Bros., who failed in about a year, and it is now occupied as an armory.

Hotels.—John Thomas, a native of Maine, removed to East Stroudsburg in 1853, and was engaged as foreman for Moses L. Noyes, who had a contract with the railroad company. After the completion of the road Thomas kept, near the depot, a small stand for the sale of refreshments for travelers. In 1856 he built the Crystal Spring Hotel, which now stands on the corner of Washington and Crystal Streets. Until 1865 it was kept as a temperance house. At that date he built an addition and other improvements and opened it as a license house. In 1864 he sold it to John Kresge, who was its landlord until 1873, when it passed into the hands of the present owner and landlord, James K. Fenner.

Lackawanna House now occupies ground where stood a dwelling-house. In 1874 Van Cott bought the property and built an addition, and opened it as a hotel. It subsequently passed into the hands of several parties. In 1883 J. S. Williams purchased the property, and was its landlord for two years and a half. It is a well-appointed hotel, three stories high, fronting on Crystal Street. Its convenience to the depot makes it a desirable place for travelers. Its present landlord is W. W. Hill.

Analomink House is situated on the corner of Crystal and Cortland Streets ; was built about 1857 by Richard Posten, who kept it for a number of years. It was the first licensed house in the town. It has had for its landlords Staples Barry, Daniel Cortright, A. Jones, John Hoenshildt and John Tims. John M. Hill is the present proprietor.

Schools.—In 1871, one year after the incorporation of the borough, plans were adopted for building a school-house, when a large and convenient building was erected. In 1876 an addition was made, and it is now capable of seating two hundred and twenty-five pupils. The school-house is situated on Cortland Street. Mr. William Treible was the first principal of the new school, followed by J. W. Paul in 1879, who is still in charge. The school is divided into five grades, and has facilities for giving the pupils a through English education. The present school board is composed of S. P. Smith, president; Dr. L. Bush, secretary ; A. W. Teeter, treasurer ; Charles Dearr, J. M. Bossard.

Monroe News.—In May 1878, George D. White, a printer of East Stroudsburg, issued the first number of the East Stroudsburg Gazette. It was a four-page weekly, seven columns to the page, and the subscription price was one dollar and fifty cents a year at first, but afterwards reduced to one dollar a year. The Gazette was printed on Wednesday, and the office was located in the same rooms now occupied by The Monroe News. The paper was established under rather unfortunate circumstances—shortness of pecuniary means and lack of management on the part of the proprietor. Nevertheless, Mr. White struggled along and toiled, kept up by the hope of better times to come, carried the paper along for a little more than three years, and then, for lack of funds, was compelled to sell the office, which he did in 1881 to E. M. Fenner, a practical printer from the State of New York. Mr. Fenner changed the name of the paper to the Express and enlarged it to eight columns to the page, leaving the subscription price at one dollar a year. The Express office did a fair business for about two years, when, on October 5, 1883, he sold the material, good will, etc., to Col. A. E. Lewis, of Milford, Pike County. Col. C. N. Pine, an old and experienced newspaper man, was placed in charge, and under his supervision and directions the business flourished. Through some disagreement between Mr. Lewis and Mr. Pine, however, the latter retired from his position as publisher before the close of the year 1884. At the beginning of 1885 the general make-up of the Express was changed from a seven-column folio to a five-column quarto, and a new publisher was placed in charge about as often as the seasons would come and go. Between January 1 and October 1, 1885, we learn that the following-named gentlemen were installed as publishers: Samuel Y. Glessner, James P. Zabriskie, W. T. Doty and Thomas J. Alleger.

On October 15, 1885, Col. Lewis sold the office to Messrs. H. P. Woodward and Arthur K. Stone, of Hawley, Wayne County. The new proprietors changed the name of the paper to The Monroe News, and left the subscription price as it was—one dollar a year. Local county correspondences were inserted ; portraits of prominent men and women were published ; the legal and court news printed gratuitously, and, within four months from the time the new proprietors took possession, The News had become so popular with the people that its circulation had doubled from what it was when they took charge of the office.

One sad thing might be written in connection with this paper, which is the fact that the first proprietor, Mr. White, became insane soon after selling to Mr. Fenner, and was placed in the insane asylum at Norristown, in this State. After remaining in this institution for a few years he became so much improved in mind that he was removed to the home of his son, at Manchester, N. J., at which place he is cared for at the time of writing this sketch.

EAST STROUDSBURG METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—In 1871 religious services were held in private houses among the Methodist residents in East Stroudsburg. During the pastorate of Rev. J. S. J. McConnell, of Stroudsburg, a class was formed separate from the mother-church, and measures taken to secure a pastor. Accordingly, in the spring of 1872, Rev. Daniel Young was sent by the Annual Conference to preside over the young flock, Rev. William Cooper being presiding elder. The church was duly organized in the spring of 1872, with Levi Smith, Michael Ransberry, Charles F. Houser, George W. Gross, William S. Barger, Wilson Pierson, Charles L. Rhodes, George Cramer and Thomas Stemple as the board of trustees. Worship was conducted in a rented building—now known as the "Academy of Music." In March, 1873, at the close of Mr. Young's pastorate, seventy-six members and twenty-eight probationers were reported to the Annual Conference. From March, 1873, to 1876, Rev. B. H. Sanderlin was pastor. During his pastorate the present church building and parsonage were erected. The corner-stone of the church was laid in the spring of 1874. On the first Sunday in November, 1874, the lecture-room was dedicated with appropriate services. In the summer of 1875 the church building was completed, the dimensions of which are forty-two feet by seventy, with spire one hundred and twenty-five feet from foundation. On July 25, 1875, the church proper was dedicated, Bishop E. G. Andrews, Rev. R. L. Dashiel, missionary secretary, and other ministers assisting in the services. At the close of Mr. Sanderlin's pastorate one hundred and eighty-one members were reported. Then followed, from 1876 to 1878, Rev. W. P. Howell; 1878 to 1879, Rev. W. C. Johnson; 1879 to 1882, Rev. John O'Neill; 1882 to 1885, Rev. William Major; from 1885 to this writing (1886), Rev. Ravil Smith has been pastor. During the year 1885 a church debt of three thousand one hundred and seventy-three dollars and eighty-three cents has been paid, and the lecture and class-rooms painted and refitted. A revival resulting in the conversion of seventy-six persons has occurred during the past year.

THE EAST STROUDSBURG PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—"The East Stroudsburg Presbyterian Church" was incorporated by charter issued from the Court of Common Pleas of Monroe County, September 27, 1876, composed of Samuel S. Dreher, president judge; Peter Grover and Charles W. Decker, associate judges. By the charter, John Leslie, Miles L. Hutchinson, Peter Empy, Alexander W. Loder and Samuel P. Smith were constituted the trustees until such time as their lawful successors were selected. Services were held with some irregularity as a constituted congregation under the charter until November 9, 1881. A committee of three ministers and two elders from Lehigh Presbytery organized a church according to the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, consisting of twenty-three members, of which William F. Bush, Miles L. Hutchinson and John M. Wyckoff were appointed elders, and the church was admitted to membership and enrolled in Lehigh Presbytery. At a meeting of Presbytery in September, 1882, a unanimous call from the church being extended to Rev. J. R. Woodward, of Newton Presbytery, and accepted, he was installed pastor November 23d of the same year, and so continues to present date.

CATHOLIC CHURCH.—St. Matthew's Catholic Church, East Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., was built in 1870; dedicated August 28, 1870, by Rev. Father McManus, assisted by Father O'Brien, of Dunmore, Luzerne County, Pa. Father O'Brien succeeded Father McManus, Father Burns succeeded Father O'Brien, Father Hurst succeeded Father Burns, Father McManus succeeded Father Hurst, Father Broderick succeeded Father McManus, Father Cusick succeeded Father Broderick, Father Manly (present pastor) succeeded Father Cusick. Until January, 1885, St. Matthew's Church belonged to the parish of Dunmore, Luzerne County, Pa., at which date it was separated from Dunmore, and now comprises Moscow, Tobyhanna, Gouldsborough and East Stroudsburg, with Father Manly as pastor, whose residence is at Moscow, Lackawanna County, Pa. St. Matthew's Church has about eighty communicants. A cemetery is attached to the church.

MICHAEL RANSBERRY. — The Ransberry family were among the early settlers of Stroud township, and Michael, grandfather of our subject, is believed to be the progenitor of the family in Monroe County, and owned lands near the line between Stroud township and Smithfield. His eldest son, John (1759–1830), says, in the instrument of sale, that he had purchased the same of the heirs of his late grandfather (maternal), George Solladay, and the signatures of Jacob D. Stroud and John P. Robeson are affixed to the paper as witnesses. This property was granted by the commonwealth of Pennsylvania to Manuel Solladay, and by him to George Solladay, his son. This Manuel Solladay's wife was Margaret, and his will is dated June 28, 1805. John Ransberry was taxed for one hundred acres of land in Smithfield in 1786, and was a large real estate owner in Stroud. He was a bachelor, and by the conditions of his will, dated 1830, he bequeathed his property to his brothers, Michael (1762–1833), Henry (1768–1866) and sisters, Maria born 1765, Elizabeth born 1767, and several of his nephews and nieces. In a sale of two hundred and ten acres of land to his brother Michael, December 29, 1827, partly in Stroud and partly in Smithfield townships, he had dealings with John Penn in real estate, and a mortgage dated 1803, with other papers of value now in possession of Mrs. Michael Ransberry, of East Stroudsburg, was given by him to Penn and witnessed by Jacob Stroud and Dan Stroud. John Ransberry bought other real estate of Charrick Van Vliet in 1796. He was well educated for his day, possessed large business ability and served as justice of the peace, according to his docket, from 1801–18. Henry, above mentioned, married Sarah Bowman (1776–1812), a near relative of the Methodist Bishop Bowman, on January 23, 1794, and settled on the Solladay farm, at High Bridge, in Stroud township, from Berwick, Pa., in 1811, where he resided until his death, at the age of ninety-seven years. Both himself and wife were members of the Methodist Church. Their children were Jesse B. (1795–1860), married Jane Gilpin, a member of one of the oldest families of Wayne County, and resided in Sterling township, that county; Susan B. (1797–1870), was the wife of Francis J. Smith, who resided and died on the old Brodhead homestead in East Stroudsburg, owned in 1886 by his son, Jesse R. Smith; John (1799–1874), a farmer in Stroud township, married, in 1821, Ann, a sister of John S. Van Vliet; George (1802–65), a farmer in Stroud township, married Ann, a sister of Dr. Philip Bush; Elenor (1805–58), was the wife of Drial Gibbs, of Portsmouth, Ohio, and one of her sons, Frank, was an officer in the late Civil War; Michael (July 10, 1807–January 31, 1883); and Sally Ann (1809–31).

Michael Ransberry, son of Henry and Sarah (Bowman) Ransberry, was born at Berwick, Pa., and removed with his parents to their future home at High Bridge, Monroe County, when he was only four years of age. He was in boyhood apprenticed to one John Brown, a tanner on the Milford road, in Smithfield township, where he remained until he learned the trade, receiving therefor twenty dollars per annum for three years. His own mother having died when he was five years old, he often related the kindness of Mrs. Brown, who became a mother to him and cared for him during his years of apprenticeship. Upon reaching his majority he returned home and conducted the farm for his father for some time. He subsequently worked at his trade at Buffalo, N. Y., and in other places, but finally returned home and again engaged in farming until the death of his father, in 1866, when he became owner of the farm, by the conditions of the will of his late uncle, John Ransberry.

In 1867 he settled in East Stroudsburg, and in 1872 erected a brick residence on Cortland Street, in which he resided until his death. He served as deputy marshal in the enrollment of soldiers for the late war; was a consistent member of the Methodist Church with which he was officially connected; was a man of correct habits, sterling integrity, and seemed to live for a purpose in life: to fulfill the full duties of the citizen, husband and father. He married, in 1835, Katharine Overpeck, who died May 6, 1846, by whom he had one son, who died in infancy. In 1864 he married for his second wife Sarah Rowe, who was born July 10, 1840, and survives him, residing on the home property before mentioned. She is a daughter of Peter (1806–85) and Susan (Foust) Rowe (1806–78), who were farmers in Stroud and Smithfield townships, and members of the Methodist Church. Peter Rowe's children were Charles, a farmer in Paradise township; Catherine, wife of Abram Brotzman, of Rushville, Susquehanna County; Jacob, died in 1873 at East Stroudsburg; Philip, a farmer at Millard, Nebraska; Elizabeth, wife of Amos Lee, a farmer in Stroud township; Peter, died in 1873, served three years and nine months in the late Civil War and was a lieutenant; Sarah, widow of the subject of this sketch; Hannah, wife of Charles Dibble, of Vosburg, Wyoming County; Mary Emma, wife of Caleb Walter, of Middle Smithfield; Lydia Ann, wife of John Custer, of Stroud township.

Henry, father of Peter Rowe, married Catherine Beninger in 1804, by whom he had children,—Jacob; Peter; Susan; Daniel; Mary; Margaret; John, of Wyoming County, Pa.; Charles, of Hawley, Pa.; William and Joseph reside in Wisconsin; Henry, a merchant at Eau Claire, Wisconsin; Katie, the twin sister of Henry, is the wife of Austin Black, of Spencerville, Md.

Jesse Ransberry Smith.—His paternal grandfather, Dr. Francis Joseph Smith (Josephus Jacobus Aerts), a native of Brussels, capital city of the Austrian Netherlands, came to America in 1777, and served in the struggle for the independence of the colonies, under General Lafayette. After the close of the war he settled in Lower Smithfield township, Wayne County, where he purchased a large tract of land, and where he resided, practicing his profession, until his death, about 1802. A further sketch of his life may be found in the medical chapter of Monroe County, in this volume. His first wife was a European, by whom he had one son, Dr. Francis Al. Smith, who practiced medicine at Milford until his death. His second wife was Betsey Brodhead, a sister of Judge Richard Brodhead, whose home was at East Stroudsburg, where Jesse R. Smith now resides, and in the house now occupied by Mr. Smith, which was the first frame house built in the place and in which the Brodhead family resided, located on the property upon which the family first settled when the country was a wilderness. She died in 1834, and by her husband, Dr. Smith, had children,—Francis J. Smith (1789–1857), father of our subject; Jane (1791–1842), the wife of Dan Dimmick, of Milford; Elizabeth, wife of James Wallace, a merchant of Milford; Julia Ann, was the wife of John T. Cross, a lawyer of Milford; Sally, wife of John Shoemaker, of Elmira, N. Y.; and Rachel, who married Jacob De La Barre, of Smithfield township, and had a daughter, Mrs. Stroud J. Hollinshead, a resident of Stroudsburg, Pa.

Dan Dimmick came to Stroudsburg in the year 1800, and after his admission to the bar practiced law at Milford until his death, in 1825. The eldest daughter of Dan and Jane Dimmick, Lucinda (1802–24), was the first wife of Judge Nathaniel B. Eldred (one son, Franklin Eldred, died while a student at Princeton College); Sally (1806–24) was the wife of C. C. D. Pinchot; Oliver S., born in 1804; Dan, born 1808, a resident of Pike County; Milo Melancthon, born 1811; Milan, born 1813, died in Pike County in 1861; William H., born in 1813, read law with Hon. N. B. Eldred and practiced his profession at Bethany and Honesdale with great success, and died at the latter place in 1861 (he was State Senator and member of Congress); Milton, born 1816; Lavina E. (1820–84), never married.

Francis J. Smith, son of Dr. Francis J. Smith, married, May 20, 1812, Susan B. Ransberry (1797–1870), a daughter of Henry Ransberry, who settled in Stroud township, from Berwick, Pa., where he died, at the advanced age of ninety-seven years, September 28, 1866. He resided on the homestead where he was born, in Lower Smithfield township, until 1835, when he removed to the Brodhead homestead, at East Stroudsburg, heretofore alluded to in this sketch. His general occupation was farming. He was an influential member of the Democratic party, held the office of justice of the peace in Lower Smithfield and East Stroudsburg nearly all of his active business life, and served one term as commissioner of old Northampton County, before the erection of Monroe County. Both himself and wife were members of the Methodist Church. Their children are Oliver Dimmick (1813–70), kept a public-house at Forks Station, on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad; Dr. Daniel D., born in 1817, is a doctor of dental surgery at Norristown, Pa.; Jesse Ransberry, subject of this sketch; George R. (1821–73), was a merchant at Forks Station; Theodore (1824–81), kept a hotel at White Haven, Pa.; Franklin D. (1827–52), read law with M. M. Dimmick, of Stroudsburg, where he practiced for some time, removed to Jacksonville, Florida, where he continued in the practice of his profession until his death; Francis J., Jr. (1829–57), was a farmer on the old homestead; Sally Ann, was first the wife of a Mr. Coleman, of New York, and after his death married Samuel S. Deitrick, of East Stroudsburg; Michael R. (1835–74), died at Moscow, Pa.; Anna Maria (1838–51); and Henry R., born in 1841, resides near Scranton, Pa., and is a conductor on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad.

Jesse Ransberry, a son of Francis J. and Susan B. (Ransberry) Smith, was born in Lower Smithfield township, then Northampton, now Monroe County, Pa., December 15, 1819. At the age of seven years he left home, and for seven years thereafter resided with his uncle, Jesse B. Ransberry, a farmer of Sterling township, Wayne County, where he became inured to farm-work, but had little opportunity for an education from books. After spending two years at home, in 1835 he went to Easton, Pa., where for three years he was engaged in learning the trade of a blacksmith, which he followed for five years thereafter at Wyalusing, Bradford County. It was at this place he met Mr. George H. Wells, a man of large business capacity, to whom he feels largely indebted for changing his business relations in his early life, and for his success in carving out a fair competence, under his direction,—with whom he engaged for some two years in building the North Branch Canal, then in process of construction, at that place. He was superintendent, under Contractor Wells, in building twelve miles of double track of the Erie Railroad, from Otisville to Port Jervis, in 1853–54, and in 1854–55 superintended the construction of nineteen miles of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, from High Bridge to Tobyhanna, Monroe County. Immediately after the completion of these public works he purchased the homestead property, containing one hundred and fifty acres of land, at East Stroudsburg, where he has since engaged in farming. At the time of his settlement here, in 1857, he relates that there were only three houses on the site of what is now a thriving borough, located on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad through line from Buffalo to New York. Mr. Smith has avoided political preferment and sought the quiet of an agricultural life; yet he has not shrunk from duty, and has served for several terms as school director and in other minor official places. He has been a deacon in the Presbyterian Church at Stroudsburg for many years, of which also his wife is a member. He married for his first wife, in 1857, Sarah L. (1828–74), a daughter of Rev. George and Abigail (Baldwin) Taylor. The former, a Presbyterian minister, died at Moravia, N. Y., June 30, 1842; the latter was a resident of Bloomfield, Essex County, N. J. His children by this union are Edward Taylor, Burton F. and Mary E. Smith. For his second wife he married, in 1878, Sarah Elizabeth, daughter of A. A. Bishop, of Wysocking, Pa. The other children of Rev. George and Abigail Taylor are Mary E., wife of Washington Ingham, of Sugar Run, Bradford County, Pa., and James R. Taylor, a farmer of Wyalusing, Pa. Rev. George Taylor's father was Major John Taylor, one of the pioneer settlers of Wyalusing.

ALEXANDER W. LODER, merchant of East Stroudsburg, was born in Stroud township, on the homestead farm, March 14, 1828, where he learned farming and obtained a fair education from books in the neighborhood school. In 1851 he married Emily Van Vliet, who was born in the same township, November 27, 1834.

She is the daughter of John S. and Susan (La Bar) Van Vliet,—the former born in 1808, a farmer during his active business life, but in 1886 retired and living with his children; the latter born in 1807, died in 1861, was the daughter of George La Bar (1863–76), a native of Mount Bethel, Northampton County, who lived to a great age, a son of Peter La Bar, who came to Penn's colony from France in 1730. John S. Van Vliet was the son of Derrick Van Vliet, an early settler in Stroud township. Their children are Achilles C., ticket agent and telegraph operator at East Stroudsburg for the Deleware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, and in the employ of that company since 1870; Laura P., wife of Dr. Horace Bush, of Wyalusing, Pa.; Vinton S., clerk in his father's store; and William H. Loder. Following his marriage Mr. Loder for four years farmed a part of the homestead, sold his farm and for one year was a confectionery merchant at Stroudsburg. He then purchased a farm in the same township and for eight years more engaged in farming, when he disposed of his farm and in 1868 bought property and built the store which Dr. Lesh owns, in 1886, in East Stroudsburg. He occupied this property as a merchant only three years, and bought the lot on the corner of Crystal and Analomink Streets, on which he erected his present store building and dwelling in 1871. Since 1873 he has carried on a successful and general mercantile business. In 1872 he was elected a justice of the peace for the borough of East Stroudsburg and by re-election held the office continuously until he resigned it to accept a position under the government as postmaster of the borough, appointed by President Cleveland in July, 1885. Upon taking this office, Mr. Loder fitted up the building adjoining his store for the post-office, with the newest designs, neatness and elegance, for the best accommodation of the people, and it may be said that this office will vie with any in the State of its size for its beautiful appointments. He was a member of the first school board after the erection of the borough of East Stroudsburg, and also a member of its first Council, and he has served for several terms in the former capacity, and is, in 1886, a member of the Council. Mr. Loder is a thoroughgoing business man and possesses such integrity and conscientious regard in business matters as to win the confidence of all who have business relations with him.

The family of Loder were among the earliest settlers in what is now Oxford township, Warren County, N. J., and one "Loder" is mentioned in the history of that county, published by Everts & Peck in 1881, along with others, as following in the settlement of that locality soon after John Axford, who was the first settler there from England, in 1730. William Loder, great-grandfather of our subject, was born in Oxford township in 1740, and married, in 1764, Catherine ——, who was born in 1745. They resided near Oxford Furnace. Their children were Jane, born 1764; Sarah, 1766; Anna, 1768; John, 1770; Isaac, 1772–1854; and William Loder, born in 1774.

Isaac, second son of William, resided about three miles below Belvidere, down the river. His wife was Sarah Hummer (1774–1839), who bore him children as follows: Hannah, born in 1795; William H., 1797; Mary, 1799; Isaac, 1801; Alexander W., 1805, removed to Kellarsville, Hamilton township, where he kept a store for several years, then went to Philadelphia, where he died; Samuel, 1807; James D., 1810, resides in Belvidere, N. J.: Sally Ann, 1813; Jacob Alfred, 1815, was a hat manufacturer and dealer in Philadelphia; and John Loder, born in 1817.

William H. Loder, eldest son of Isaac and Sarah Loder, was born near Oxford Furnace, and, in 1819, married Elizabeth Ann Kinney (1797–1848), a daughter of Frederick and Margaret (Snover) Kinney, of Walnut Valley, Warren County, N. J. In 1826 he removed to Stroud township, Monroe County, Pa., and purchased a small farm, to which he made additions from time to time, until he had one hundred and sixty acres. He was a carpenter by trade, and followed this occupation nearly all of his active business life. He retired from his farm and other business in 1860, took up his residence in Stroudsburg, where he resided until his death, in 1872. He had no pecuniary assistance in starting out in life for himself, but acquired a fair competence, the result of honest industry. He was a man of exemplary habits, good judgment and both himself and wife were members of the Presbyterian Church at Stroudsburg, following in the same line of religious persuasion as their ancestors. Their children are Frederick K. (1823–85), married and settled near Albion, Jackson County, Michigan, where he died, leaving a family; Isaac H. (1826–83), married and removed to Kansas about 1856, where he resided until his death; Alexander W. Loder, subject of this sketch; Sarah Maria, born in 1833, is the wife of Melchior Smith, a wheelwright of Stroudsburg; Rachel E., born in 1835, wife of David Miller, a blacksmith of East Stroudsburg; William M., born in 1839, went to Kansas, where he enlisted at the breaking out of the late Civil War and served in Missouri under General Sigel. He returned to Stroudsburg, and at the time of the draft, in 1862, again entered the service as a substitute, was made lieutenant and served in the Army of the Potomac for nine months more. After his return from the war he married, and, soon afterward, settled in Albion, Michigan, where he has acquired a large competency as a contractor and lumber merchant.

MILES LEACH HUTCHINSON, justice of the peace at East Stroudsburg, Pa., was born at Hutchinson Station, on the Belvidere and Delaware Railroad, Warren County, N. J., April 18, 1831, where he was reared and assisted his father in his saw-mill and lumber business. After the death of his father, in 1846, in partnership with his brother, Andrew J., he ran the mill, which they rented of his mother until her death, in 1857. On account of the ill health of his brother-in-law, James Ramsay, at Ramsayburg, he took charge of his store, lumber-yard and farm at that place until his death, two years afterwards, when for three years following he was a partner with his sister, Mrs. Ramsay, in continuing the business at that place. In 1866 he removed to East Stroudsburg, where he bought a farm of sixty-five acres, now owned by M. M. Kistler, which, after eighteen months, he sold, and for one year thereafter resided in Stroudsburg. In 1869 he settled in East Stroudsburg and built his present residence on Washington Street, where he has resided since.

M. L. Hutchinson

Upon the erection of the borough of East Stroudsburg, Mr. Hutchinson was elected on the Republican ticket a justice of the peace for a term of five years. He was re-elected and served for a second term, was then appointed to the same office by Governor Hoyt, under the regulation of the new Constitution, and served one year, when, by re-election, he served a third term of five years, and in the borough election of 1886 he was again re-elected for a fourth term to the same office, notwithstanding the large majority is Democratic, fully attesting the confidence of the public in his fitness and ability to discharge the responsible duties of that office with justice to all, and in equity in all matters brought before him. A high commentary upon Mr. Hutchinson's decisions during his long and continued career as a justice of the peace is the fact that only in one instance has ever an appeal to the higher court been taken from his decision, and in that case the jury confirmed his opinion without a division. He has taken an active interest in all matters pertaining to the growth and prosperity of the borough since he has been a resident of the same, and contributed commensurate with his means to the support of enterprises needing help. He is a director of the old Stroudsburg Bank. Both himself and his wife are members of the Presbyterian Church, of which he served for many years as elder, and for ten years past he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school of that church.

Mr. Hutchinson married, January 19, 1861, Amanda D., daughter of Major John and Sarah (Frome) Pace, of Warren County, N. J.; the former died in 1842, the latter in 1845. She was born January 3, 1838. They have no children. Major John Pace and wife were buried at Oxford, near where they had resided, and had other children as follows: Mary (deceased), was the wife of George Shoemaker, of Oxford; Jacob (deceased), resided on the old homestead; Elizabeth, of Belvidere, is the widow of the late George Hoff; Jane (deceased), was the wife of Thomas McFall Davidson, of Harmony, N. J., now a resident of Illinois; Sally Ann, wife of Abel Hoff, of Harmony; Catherine, widow of the late Amzi Mutchler, of East Stroudsburg, whose son is Dr. John Pace Mutchler, of Stroudsburg.

Major John Pace was the only son of Major Pace, of Warren County. Henry Frome, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Hutchinson, resided contiguous to the Warren County almshouse, and lived to the great age of ninety-six years. The Fromes and Paces were old families in Warren County.

William Hutchinson (1783–1848), father of Miles L. Hutchinson, married Mary Hay (1794–1859). He spent his active business life in lumbering and milling. He erected the gristmill at Uniontown, N. J., subsequently sold it and bought a saw-mill at Hutchinson Station, which he run until his death. He was a native of Lower Mount Bethel, Pa. Mary Hay was a daughter of John Hay and Mary Best, of South Easton, Pa., farmers. They removed to a farm near Delaware Station, on the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, where he died at the age of eighty-five; she at the age of eighty-one years. The farm is owned in 1886 by Hon. John I. Blair. The children of William and Mary (Hay) Hutchinson are John D., owned the Samuel De Puy property at Hutchinson Station, a farm and saw-mill, where he died (his widow resides on the old homestead; her daughter is the wife of Rev. Clark Kline, of Oxford, N. J.); Ellen, deceased, was the wife of George Stocker, of Lower Mount Bethel, Pa.; Mary is the widow of the late Judge Jeremy Mackey, who was associate judge of Monroe County, and for many years cashier of the old Stroudsburg Bank; Harriet (deceased), was the wife of Edward L. Allen (deceased), of Harmony, N. J.; her husband died at East Stroudsburg; William, a bachelor (retired), resides at Delaware Station, N. J.; Eveline, is the wife of Jeremiah Osmun, of Delaware Station; Andrew J., engaged in the lumber business, resides at the same place; Elizabeth, was first the wife of James Ramsey, before mentioned, and after his death married Dr. Little Osmun, of Phillipsburg, N. J.; Miles Leach Hutchinson, subject of this sketch; and James, conducting a gristmill at Delaware Station. Miles L. Hutchinson's grandfather, John Hutchinson, was a large real-estate owner of Lower Mount Bethel, Pa., having some twelve hundred acres of land. He reared a family of four sons—Thomas, Andrew, James and William—and two daughters, who married and had families. The parents died there. John Hutchinson's father was of Scotch birth, was a sailor, and at eighteen years of age had sailed around the world. He soon after settled in Northampton County, Pa., was the progenitor of the family in the State, and lived to be one hundred and one years of age. The religious persuasion of the family has ever been Presbyterian.

CHAPTER XIII.

HAMILTON TOWNSHIP.

THE decree erecting Hamilton as a separate township was issued by the court of Northampton County on the 24th of December, 1762. It is bounded on the north by Jackson township, Pocono township touching its extreme northern point, east by Stroud township, south by Northampton County and west by Ross and Chestnuthill townships. It is the most populous township in the county, and takes high rank for the productiveness of its lands, the enterprise of its citizens and the excellence of its educational appointments. The population in 1830 reached fourteen hundred and twenty-eight, and in 1840 the census gave fifteen hundred and eight as the number of its inhabitants. In 1844 the assessed value of real and personal property was one hundred and twenty-nine thousand seven hundred and thirty dollars, and of trades and occupations thirty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty dollars. Its present population is eighteen hundred and seventy-five.

NATURAL FEATURES.—The surface of the township is diversified, being mountainous, hilly and level. In the southern part is a limestone ridge, the product of which has been utilized both for agricultural and building purposes. The centre is gravelly in some parts, with a rich clay loam in the valleys. Hills abound in the north, the land being more or less stony, but still productive. The staple products are wheat, rye, oats, corn, potatoes and considerable hay, which grows in much luxuriance. Fruits find here a congenial soil and climate, apples, pears and plums being grown with much success, while peaches in some portions of the township attain great perfection.

McMichael Creek (named after an early squatter in bad repute with both whites and Indians) flows from west to east nearly through the centre of Hamilton township. Pencil Creek rises in the Pocono Mountain, flows south, then directly east and empties into the McMichael Creek near the centre of the township. Cherry Creek rises near the line between Ross and Hamilton townships, and flowing easterly through Cherry Valley, pours its waters into Brodhead Creek in Smithfield township. In the southwest is a small sheet of water known as Lake Poponoming.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—It is difficult to determine who first settled the portion of Monroe County embraced in Hamilton township. John McDowel emigrated from the north of Ireland some years before the Revolutionary War and purchased a tract of land, in 1764, of Rev. Richard Peters, to whom it was deeded by Nicholas Weiser. He obtained it from the original proprietors in 1744, as will be seen by the following deed:

"John Penn, Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, Esquires, True and absolute proprietaries and Governors-in-Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania and counties of New Castle, Kent and Sussex on Delaware. To all unto whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas, By virtue of a warrant under the seal of our land office bearing date the 26th day of August last, there was surveyed and laid out on the eighth day of October then next following unto Nicholas Weiser, of the county of Bucks, a certain tract of land situate in Smithfield township, within the said county, bounded and described as follows, viz.: Beginning at a marked hickory-tree, and from thence extending by vacant land the five courses and distances next following, viz.: north forty degrees and one hundred and eighty-two perches to a post, north sixty perches to a post, west one hundred and sixty-five perches to a post, south forty degrees west two hundred and sixty perches to a post and east two hundred and sixteen perches to the place of beginning, containing two hundred and forty-four acres, and the allowance of six acres per cent. for roads and highways. . . . Know ye that in consideration of the sum of thirty-seven pounds sixteen shillings and four pence lawful money of Pennsylvania paid by the said Nicholas Weiser, . . . Yielding and paying yearly to us, our heirs and successors, at Pennsbury aforesaid, at or upon the first day of March in every year from the first day of March last one half-penny sterling for every acre of the same or value thereof in coin current according as the exchange shall thus be between our provinces and the city of London. . . . Witness George Thomas, Esq., Lieutenant-Governor of the said province, who, in pursuance and by virtue of certain powers and authorities to him for this purpose (inter alia) granted by the said proprietaries, hath hereunto set his hand and caused the great seal of the said province to be hereto affixed at Philadelphia this twenty-eighth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and forty-four, the seventeenth year of the reign of King George the second."

Mr. McDowel, on his arrival in Monroe County, sojourned for a brief period with Mr. Depui, of Shawnee, and then proceeded to the improvement of his purchase. He married a Depui and had two sons and several daughters, the latter being represented by many of the leading families of the county. Jacob H. Fetherman is now the owner of the property, his wife being a great-granddaughter of John McDowel.

Thomas Bond, prior to the War of the Revolution, became a resident of the township, having built and occupied a cabin located in the orchard on John W. Young's farm. He joined a scouting-party formed with a view to avenging the death of the Kresge family, and started in pursuit of the savages who had perpetrated the crime. On reaching a spring the party stacked their muskets and stopped to drink. The Indians came suddenly upon them, and in the confusion which followed, all, with one exception, were massacred. Thomas Bond was among the number and met his death at this time.

Nicholas Young purchased a tract of land in the present Hamilton township from Thomas and Richard Penn in 1763. Among his children was a son Nicholas, who inherited the property, having married a Miss Rummage. The children of the union were John, Jacob, George, Mary, Elizabeth, Susan, Christy Ann and Sally. Jacob occupied the homestead and John settled upon land now owned by his son, John W. Young, having married Sarah Woolbert. Their children are George, John W. and Mary, of whom John A. married a daughter of Thomas Miller, of the same township, and has three children.

Philip Bossard, who emigrated from Alsace, Germany, settled on the property known in the family as the homestead farm, in 1755, where he resided until his death. Among his sons was Melchior, to whom this property, embracing two hundred and fifty acres, was deeded in 1790. His children were Peter, Andrew, Christopher and George, all of whom, with the exception of Peter, removed to New York State. The latter married Margaret Kern and had nine children, of whom Samuel, Peter and Catherine Ruth now live in Hamilton township.

John Fellencer, on his emigration with his wife from Germany, located on a farm which he cleared; the township at that early day being chiefly covered by forest. He had two sons —Peter and John—both of whom settled in the township. John, who married, had three sons —Joseph, John and Jacob, the two former being still residents of the township. Peter had two sons—Peter, who resided in Jackson township, and John, who removed to Iowa and is since deceased.

Samuel Rees was a native of Chestnut Hill township and subsequently removed to the northern part of Hamilton, near the Jackson line, where he followed farming pursuits. He married a Miss Rinker, to whom were born sons—John, Samuel and Reuben—and several daughters. Samuel now resides in Stroudsburg, John removed to Luzerne County, Pa., where he died, and Reuben settled in Iowa. The only representative of this branch of the family in the county is Samuel Rees, of Stroudsburg.

Casper Metzgar came from Bucks County more than a century since and purchased land in Cherry Valley, which he proceeded to improve. His children were five sons—Jacob, Peter, Nicholas, Jonas and Christian—and several daughters, all but one having settled in the township. The members of the family in Hamilton are Andrew the son of Jacob; Philip and Lydia (Mrs. Joseph Fables), the children of Nicholas; and Caspar and Mary Ann (Mrs. Emanuel Marsh).

Philip Fetherman came in 1806 from Lehigh County and located on a farm near Bossardsville, now owned by Abram Fetherman. His children were five sons and four daughters. Three sons—Balser, Abram and John—settled in Hamilton, and are still represented by their respective children. The children of Balser are Charles, Jacob H. and Jonathan, the latter of whom is but recently deceased. The sons of Abram in the township are Abram and Manasseh. One son of John Fetherman, also named John, resides in the township.

Abram Marsh removed from Northampton County to the township when it was still in a primitive condition, and proceeded to improve the land he purchased. He was twice married, and the father of five sons and five daughters. John, Abram, Isaac and Samuel settled in the township, the last-named having later become a resident of Pocono township. Two sons of Isaac—John and Isaac—reside in Hamilton, both being moulders by trade, the former of whom was for years the owner of the Hamilton Foundry.

John Williams resided in Hamilton township during the War of the Revolution, and cultivated a farm he purchased at an early day. By his marriage to a Miss Bush were born children, —John, Jacob and Peter, and two daughters. One of the latter married Frederick Keiser, the other became Mrs. Isaac Marsh. The last-named well remembered the farewell dance of the Indians when they departed from the country, at which she was present. The only representatives of the Williams family now in the township are Charles, the son of John, and Eugene, his grandson.

John Storm resided on the farm now the property of Amos Frantz, where he owned a tract of valuable land. His two sons were Andrew, former associate judge and sheriff of Monroe County, and Frederick. A daughter (Mrs. Anna Slutter) is also a resident of Hamilton. Jerome Storm, the son of Andrew, is a resident of Stroudsburg.

Conrad Woodling cultivated the farm now owned by William Flemming. His children were two sons, Andrew and John, and a daughter, Elizabeth, wife of Peter Butz. Andrew Woodling located in Hamilton, and John became a resident of Pocono township. The former has three daughters, who are residents of the township,—Elizabeth (Mrs. Isaiah Rinker), Sally (Mrs. Joseph Bittenbender) and Rachel Jane (Mrs. Nathan Lesh).

Jacob Learned formerly occupied the farm now owned by Samuel Bittenbender, where he settled prior to the Revolution. He left a son Samuel and two daughters,—Elizabeth (Mrs. Andrew Woodling, of Hamilton) and Lydia (Mrs. John Woodling, of Tannersville). Samuel Learned settled in Hamilton and married Louisa Rinker. Two sons—Peter and Jeremiah—reside in the township, and several daughters are residents of other portions of the State.

Henry Pencil, who achieved reputation for skill as a hunter and fisherman, lived upon the spot where the house of David Shook stands. One son, Jacob, and two daughters settled in the township. The former left a family of children, of whom Jacob is now the only representative in Hamilton. The name is perpetuated by the stream known as Pencil Creek.

The name of Rinker is one of the oldest in the township, Solomon Rinker being the occupant of the farm formerly owned by his father. Of his four sons, Samuel is the only one who retains his residence in Hamilton. George Rinker for many years occupied the farm now owned by Harry Hobbs. None of his descendants remain in the township.

Felix Weiss, who resided upon a farm now owned by Emanuel Shoemaker, left a son George, who settled on the home farm. He married Susan Snyder, and had one son, George, and two daughters,—Amelia (married to Emanuel Shoemaker) and Catherine (Mrs. Lynford Marsh, of Stroudsburg).

George Van Buskirk removed from Bucks County to the farm now owned by Wesley Green. He married Elizabeth Werkheiser and died, leaving no descendants.

Aaron Van Buskirk, also a former resident of Bucks County, settled in the northwest portion of the township, having married Susan Wagner, to whom were born twelve children. Four sons—Samuel, Jesse, Andrew and Jacob—and two daughters—Mary and Ann—settled in the township. The descendants of Jesse now residents of Hamilton are Aaron B., Emeline (Mrs. Isaac Marsh) and Rachel J. (Mrs. John Marsh).

Bartholomew Shiveley, about the year 1800, became the owner of the farm now the property of Charles Bossard, which he cleared and improved. The family have since become extinct.

Anthony Kintz was an early settler and lived on the homestead, subsequently the property of his grandson, Anthony Kintz. His sons were Anthony, who removed to New York, and Melchior and John, who remained residents of the township. Melchior left four sons, of whom Anthony occupies the ancestral estate. A son of John resides near Poponoming Lake.

George Meisner resided near the above-mentioned lake, and left three sons,—Michael, George and John, all deceased. The family on the male side have become extinct, though several female representatives are residents of the township.

Martin Eyer removed from Bucks County at an early day. His son, Philip Henry, who was the occupant of a farm now owned by John Halderman, married Elizabeth Roderock. He has two sons—John and Jacob—and two daughters now living in Hamilton.

George Gower owned the farm now the property of John Gower. His son John intermarried with the Shafer family, and has one son, John, now residing in the township.

Barnet Fenner, who was a farmer, resided near Sciota. His children were a son, Henry, and a daughter, Margaret (Mrs. Werkheiser). Henry married Margaret Hood, whose children are Henry, Barnet and Joseph, and five daughters now living. Henry, the only surviving son, resides near Sciota.

Valentine Werkheiser, on his removal from Northampton County, settled near Sciota, where he engaged in the cultivation of a farm. His sons were Valentine, Charles, John, George and Henry. The last-named settled on the homestead and married Catherine Arnold, whose six children are Henry A., John A., Abram, Elizabeth, Mary and Hannah. The only surviving son, Henry A., resides near Snydersville, where he is a farmer.

Michael Starner resided on the farm now owned by John F. Bender, whence he removed soon after the Revolutionary War. He acquired great influence over the Indians, with whom he was very popular, and on frequent occasions their host. All his sons removed from the township and none of the name are now within its boundaries. The descendants of the daughter are, however, to be found in Hamilton.

Among the earliest settlers was George Setzer, who, on his emigration, settled in Hamilton township, having purchased land which had been but slightly improved, and is now owned by Alexander Harps. He married a Miss Berrier and had two sons—Michael and George—and several daughters, both of the former having settled in Hamilton. Michael married Miss Elizabeth Shale, whose children are Jacob, Abram, Mary, Betsey, Henry and George. Henry now resides on the farm purchased by his father, and enjoys excellent health in his ninety first year.

Joseph Starner, now in his eighty-second year, came from Plainfield, Northampton County, when eighteen years of age, and spent three years in the service of Daniel Houser. He then rented a farm, subsequently purchasing in Ross township. Returning to Hamilton, he became owner, in 1865, of his present farm on Pencil Creek. He married, in 1821, Elizabeth, daughter of Daniel Houser, and has ten living children.

John Bender came from Philadelphia about the year 1824 and settled near Sciota, where he followed his trade as a shoemaker. His five children were Mary (Mrs. Trotter), Catherine (Mrs. Bechtel), Elizabeth (Mrs. Sheble), Deborah (Mrs. Evans), all of Philadelphia, and one son, John F., who resides on a farm near Saylorsburg. He married Sophia, daughter of Peter Kester, and has four living children, of whom William M., a resident of Hamilton, is both farmer and school-teacher.

John Arnold settled on a farm, the land of which he purchased at a very early date. He married a Miss Santee, whose children were George, John, Abraham, Conard, Christy Ann, Louis, Catherine, Hannah, Elizabeth. All the sons settled in the township, where they died. Representatives of this family still reside in Hamilton.

George Dreher, on his removal from Northampton County, about the period of the Revolution, located on property now owned by Jacob Houck, above Snydersville. He married Lydia Heller, whose family had previously settled below the Wind Gap. The children of this marriage were Jacob, George, John, Michael H., Melchior, Polly (Mrs. George Learn), Sally (Mrs. Andrew Whitesell) and Elizabeth (Mrs. Samuel Pugh). George Dreher, in 1810, removed to Stroudsburg and combined with his trade, that of a tailor, the duties of a landlord. His son Jacob married Elizabeth Storm, and has children—Jeremiah, Andrew, John, Mrs. Matthias Stecker and George, still living in Hamilton township. Simon removed to Wisconsin, and a daughter, Mrs. Joseph De Young, resides in Stroudsburg. Melchior married Sarah Drake. His children—Daniel, George, Silas, Wilson, Martha (Mrs. P. H. Robinson), Mary (Mrs. Amos Shoemaker) and Mrs. Elizabeth Peters—reside in Stroud township. Another sister, Mrs. Simon Houser, is a resident of the Water Gap. Michael H. Dreher married Elizabeth, daughter of Adam Smith, and had children—Samuel S., Darius, George H., Edward B., William, Sally Ann (Mrs. John Jackson), Anna Maria (Mrs. Augustus Michaels), Eliza (Mrs. George W. Peters) and Mary Alice (Mrs. M. E. Hartzler), four of whom are residents of Stroudsburg. George H. and Edward B. are deceased.

Walter Barry, who was of English birth, came to Hamilton from Philadelphia prior to the War of the Revolution, settling on the land now owned by his grandson, Joseph Barry. He had two sons, Walter and Robert. Walter died at the age of one hundred and eleven years. Robert married Elizabeth Myers. His children are Joseph, Lewis, Abram, Francis, Melchior, Simon, Robert, Catherine (Mrs. Moses Swink), Ann, Elizabeth (Mrs. Gabriel Davis), Christina (Mrs. Jacob Lace), Rachel (Mrs. Isaac Slutter). Of this number, Francis and Rachel reside in the township.

Christopher Keller emigrated from Germany with his parents when but eight years of age. His father having died during the passage, the widow married George Hartlieb, whose wife had also met her death on the steamer. They settled in Hamilton in 1749, and brought with them the lad Christopher, who grew to man's estate and married Christiana Bossard. Among their children were Christopher, George and Andrew. George married Rachel Dills, of New Jersey, whose children were John, Joseph and Christopher. John was born at Kellersville and married Sarah Drach. Their children are David, Rudolph, Andrew, Mary M., Julia Ann, Rachael and Sarah Ann. The last-named, now the wife of Dr. R. Levering, is the only one of this number residing in the township. David and Andrew removed to Stroudsburg, and Rudolph settled in Iowa.

John Williams resided in Hamilton, on land now owned by Andrew Keiser (now Kellersville). His children are Jacob, John, Peter, Sally and Polly, all now deceased. Peter resided in the township until 1861, when Stroudsburg became his home. He married Hannah M. Shaw, and has children,—Jerome S., Mary E. (Mrs. P. S. Posten), Jane (Mrs. Charles S. Dietrich), Jacob S., Elmira S. (Mrs. Josiah Fenner), Josephus, Peter S. and Samuel S., all of whom are living with the exception of Jacob S., who died while in the service during the late Rebellion.

John Shaw came in 1778 from New Haven, Conn., to the Wyoming Valley, and participated in the massacre of that year. He was deputized at the close of the conflict to repair to Monroe (then Northampton) County in search of stores for the survivors after that memorable slaughter, and stopped at the house of John McDowel, of Hamilton township, for flour and provender, on which occasion he met a daughter of this early settler, whom he afterward married. Their children were John, Richard, Peter, and five daughters,—Mrs. Metzgar, Mrs. Evans, Mrs. Bossard, Mrs. Butz and one other. John Shaw, after his marriage, settled on the McDowel property, now owned by Jacob H. Fetherman and others, a part of which was inherited by Peter Shaw, his son. The latter married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael Butz, and had eleven children. Those now in the county are Jerome and Hannah (née Mrs. Peter Williams), of Stroudsburg, and Ann Maria (Mrs. Ferdinand Kester), of Hamilton.

Charles E. Kistler, born January 24, 1839, in Lynn township, Lehigh County, Pa., was the eldest son of Stephen and Peter (Mosser) Kistler.

The Kistler family is readily traced back to about 1735, it appearing that George Kistler was one of a number of Palatinates or Swiss, who moved from Falkner Swamp and Goshenhoppen (present Montgomery County) up into Lynn township, and settled down in the vicinity of what is now called the Jerusalem Church, near that date.

Becoming a member of that church, he was an elder therein from about 1755 to 1768. His children were George, Jacob, John, Samuel, Philip, Michael, Barbara, Dorotea and Elizabeth. Of this family, Jacob settled on the homestead and had eight children,—Philip, Jacob, Daniel, Michael, Solomon, Catharine, Magdalena and one other. Michael (the second) and Maria, his wife, raised a large family, one of whom was Stephen, before mentioned. Michael was the tanner in Kistler Valley, Lehigh County, and lived there many years, carrying on the business. His son Stephen was born there and learned the trade with his father, increasing his knowledge of the business by apprenticeship at Catawissa, Pa., and afterward becoming an important factor in this extensive industry, owning and operating tanneries at several different points and establishing a headquarters in New York City. He died on March 16, 1880, at Stroudsburg, Pa., having survived his wife, who, after years of severe suffering, died April 8, 1877.

Their children were Charles E., Rufus (married Mary J. Edinger, who bore him four children,—Emma A., Elmer E., Edward U. and Arthur S.; (family now residing at Great Bend, Pa.), Angeline, Almira, Alfred, Wilson (married Henrietta Stauffer, and lives with their two children at Lock Haven, Pa.), Mary (married John H. Lesh and resides at Plainfield, N. J.), Milo (married Alice Clator and makes his home in Brooklyn, N. Y.), Michael D. (married Massena M. Seibert, now residing at Great Bend, Pa.) Of this family, both Almira and Alfred died in childhood.

Charles E. Kistler

Charles E. Kistler obtained his education from books prior to his fourteenth year, and then entered the tannery at Tannersville, Monroe County, whither his parents had removed some years before. Under the careful supervision of his father he rapidly became proficient in his chosen calling and also imbibed energy and self-reliance. At twenty-one years of age he was admitted to partnership at Tannersville, and upon the entry of his brother Rufus into the firm, some short time thereafter, the title became S. Kistler & Sons, which style has, with but slight modification, been since retained in the general business, and acquired a powerful position in the tannery interest of the country.

In 1867 Mr. Kistler retired from this partnership, although retaining connection with his father in various matters, and removed to Scioto, Monroe County, to make a home and attend to the affairs of the large tannery there located, which he had purchased some time before. In company with his brother Wilson, he, in 1869, started the tannery at Lock Haven, under style of Kistler Brothers, and the business being pushed with energy and great ability, exerted a strong influence and acquired tanneries located at five different places in Pennsylvania, viz.: Scioto, Lock Haven, St. Mary's, Rolf and one in Huntingdon County.

A man of sterling integrity and immense energy and ability, his presence was largely felt, even beyond the circle in which his life was passed. Kind and true in all the relations of life, he could have taken a prominent place in politics; but, devotedly attached to his family, preferred to give his entire attention to the development of such relations and the furthering his large business interests. In religious convictions he was Lutheran, and for years was deacon in the Tannersville Church. He was a director of the Stroudsburg Bank, and his views and advice were sound and respected.

His sudden death, on March 22, 1880, at the early age of forty-one, was widely deplored,—a good man and valuable citizen had fallen.

On March 18, 1861, he was married to Miss Ann E. Woodling, who bore him seven children,—Emma Jane, Catharine, Caroline, Edwin Oscar, Mary, Andrew Milton, and an infant unnamed, all of whom, excepting Mary and Andrew M., died young; Caroline alone reaching her fifteenth year, with full conception of the value of a liberal education. Mary was sent to the Moravian Seminary, Bethlehem, Pa., where she was graduated in June, 1885, and is now attending the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, Mass., while the only surviving son, Andrew M., is attending the State Normal School at Lock Haven, Pa., and finding a home with his uncle, Wilson Kistler. On June 20, 1882, Hattie, the two-months-old daughter of Mary Jane Rinker, the deceased sister of Mrs. Kistler, was adopted and finds a loving home with them. The business interests are at this time (March, 1886) under the care of Mr. Wilson Kistler, the Scioto Tannery being superintended by Mr. J. Woodling, Mrs. Kistler's brother. The latter works are run by a forty horse-power engine and give employ to some twenty operatives, manufacturing "Union Crop," and supplying the New York market through Messrs. Kistler, Lesh & Co.

The Woodling family have been settled in Hamilton township many years, engaged in farming and have always been honorable and respected members of society. Conrad and Maria (Hoffner) Woodling lived and died in this beautiful valley. John, their son, married Lydia, daughter of Jacob Learn, of Hamilton township. He was born 1808, and died 1869, and his wife born 1815, died 1882. They had eight children,—Sallie Ann (died in infancy), Anne Maria (married Isaac Stauffer and has one child, Alice), Peter and Ann Elizabeth (twins) (Ann E., married Charles E. Kistler), Jeremiah married Margaret Anglemyer), Mary Jane (married Uriah Rinker, has one child, Hattie, as mentioned, and died in 1882), Emma (married Peter Anglemyer and has four children, Harvey, Charles, Jennie and Ora), Jacob M. (married Hattie Barnes). In 1884 Mrs. Kistler erected a handsome home in Scioto, which is complete in arrangement and furnishes abundant testimony to the tastes of its occupants.

BURIAL-PLACES.

The oldest burial-ground in the township is that connected with the Hamilton Church. It has been in use since the erection of the first church edifice, and is still the place of interment for many of the old families of the township. The Learn family, of Pocono township, massacred by the Indians, are here buried, and headstones, more or less obliterated by the ravages of time, mark their last resting-place. The Bossard family are here represented, as also the Fenners, Kellers, Trachs, Slutters and Kesters.

Mount Zion Cemetery, which is now the burial-ground in most general use, was started nearly half a century ago, the first interment being that of Simon Heller. It has received more care than is accorded to most spots of this character in the township, and the location in the centre of Hamilton makes it accessible to the residents of this and contiguous townships.

A very old place of interment east of Saylorsburg, formerly used by the Van Buskirk and neighboring families, has, during late years, been almost abandoned.

There are also the Gower and the Young's burial-grounds, taking their names from the families who have used them; the cemetery connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, near Saylorsburg, and one adjoining the Cherry Valley Methodist Episcopal Church, both in use by the respective congregations, as also by the immediate neighborhood.

Early Schools.—It is very difficult to obtain authentic information regarding the early schools of Hamilton township, but it is conceded that the first school remembered, and doubtless the first organization of its kind in the township, was located near the Hamilton Church, the first building having been constructed of logs some years after the close of the Revolutionary War. The first teacher remembered is one John Adam Eyer, who opened a pay-school and instructed his pupils in the German language. He was very popular with both parents and children, not less for his tact and discipline than for his genial and kindly nature, and frequently had as many as sixty scholars on his roll. Each child paid fifty cents per month for instruction.

George Gordon also taught at this point, as also in the stone school-house near Kellersville, since demolished. His death was sudden, and greatly shocked his pupils, who were gathering for their morning tasks when the intelligence reached them. Several of Mr. Gordon's scholars are still living in the township.

An early teacher, whose services were sought in various portions of the township where school-houses had been erected, was one Unglemoyer. The school territory of Hamilton is divided into fifteen districts, five months being the average period of teaching during the year. The schools are taught by twelve male and three female teachers. The number of children in attendance, according to the last report of the superintendent of the county, is four hundred and seventy-five, and the average attendance three hundred and forty-eight. The total amount of tax levied for school and building purposes is $2341.96, and the State appropriation $407.81. The total receipts for school purposes are $2711.45. There is paid as salary to teachers $1681.75. The majority of the buildings devoted to educational purposes are in good repair, and the schools are in a flourishing condition.

Early Roads.—The earliest road in the township is known as the Sullivan road, which passed through the Wind Gap, entered the township at the southwest corner, wended its way a northerly course through Sciota, continuing in a northerly direction through Pocono township and diverging to the west in a direct line for Stoddartsville, from whence it reached Wilkes-Barre and the Wyoming Valley. This road was opened by General Sullivan in 1778, to enable his army to reach the Wyoming Valley and rescue the settlers from the Indian massacres, so frequent in that early day. Many points along the road have a renewed interest from the incidents connected with the progress of this army. Another road was in early times known as the Minisink road, which started at the Wind Gap, entered the township near Saylorsburg, passed through Bossardsville and thence to Stroudsburg. Highways were subsequently opened, as the presence of settlers rendered them necessary, until Hamilton is now traversed by many roads, which are usually in excellent repair.

VILLAGES.

Sciota village, formerly known as Fennersville, was laid out by Henry Fenner and as early as 1845 embraced twelve dwellings, a store, a tavern, two grist-mills, a carding-machine and the usual number of handicrafts in a village thus situated. Except in the number of dwellings, one or more of which are elegant and attractive, and the impulse given to business by a successfully operated tannery, it has not grown greatly in dimensions or in fortune. It has now one store, kept by Nathan M. Lesh; one harness shop, by Silas Frantz; one wagon factory, by John G. Weiss; a hotel, by Mahlon Everett; two grist-mills, by George Brown and George Snyder; a school-house and a post office, established on the formation of the hamlet, with Nathan M. Lesh as the present postmaster. The tannery here located is elsewhere mentioned.

SNYDERSVILLE.—This is a hamlet laid out by Abel Patterge as early as the organization of the township. It contained, in 1845, eight dwellings, one store, one tavern and a school-house. It has now a tavern, of which Samuel Shook is the landlord; a store, kept by John M. Ace; an Odd-Fellows' Hall; a mill, conducted by Frank Haney; a blacksmith shop, a school and a church. A post-office was early established at this point, Alexander Harps being the present postmaster.

KELLERSVILLE hamlet was begun by George Keller as early as 1812, and when the county-seat of Monroe County was located received favorable notice as a desirable site for the county buildings. A strong effort was made to bring about this result, but the rival claims of Stroudsburg proving too great, the hamlet has not since increased in population. In 1845 it had ten dwellings, one store, one tavern, a school-house, a grist-mill, a clover-mill and a church near it. It has now a grist-mill, owned by Levi M. and David Slutter; the Kellersville Woolen-Mills, owned by J. G. Kerkhuff, and devoted to carding only and closed in winter; and a store, kept by G. B. Duke.

STORMVILLE.—The property on which this hamlet is located was originally owned by Judge Andrew Storm. In 1845 Casper Metzgar erected a store, which he managed for some years, when it was transferred to Allen Metzgar, who now owns the property, though its business is conducted by Frank Fetherman. Soon after the opening of the store a post office was established, Casper Metzgar receiving the commission as postmaster. His son Allen was next appointed, and Frank Fetherman now holds the office. A blacksmith and wagon shop also add to the business of the place. The lime-kilns near this place are owned by Casper Metzgar and were constructed in 1877. There are three kilns, supplied with stone from quarries in the vicinity, their capacity being three hundred bushels of lime per day, for which a market is found in the neighborhood.

BOSSARDSVILLE was projected by Melchior Bossard about the year 1842. He first engaged in farming and later obtained a license to open a hotel. A store was kept by George Keller, who sold to Linford Heller, his successor. Joseph Bossard afterward established a business, and purchasing the former store, consolidated it with his own. He sold to Jacob S. McNeal, who again sold to John P. Carmer, the present owner. He is also the postmaster of the place. The hotel is kept by Peter Bonser. Near Bossardsville are extensive lime-kilns controlled by Peter Heller, Charles Williams and John P. Carmer, which draw their supplies from the neighboring quarries. They produce an aggregate of two thousand bushels per day when in operation.

SAYLORSBURG was laid out by Charles and Samuel Saylor about the year 1825. Having purchased the land, they erected a tavern, of which Peter Kemmerer was the first landlord, the present proprietor being Jacob Haney. Soon after a store was opened by Charles Saylor. There is an additional hotel kept by John W. Meckas, and a post-office, David Saylor being the postmaster.

KUNKLETOWN is a hamlet consisting of a few dwellings and a mill, owned by Henry Falmer, of Easton.

MANUFACTURES AND INDUSTRIES.—The tannery at Sciota was built by Joseph Fenner, and by him sold to Butz & Bossard, who controlled it for a brief period, when Charles E. Kistler purchased the property, his estate now controlling it. It is run by steam-power, a forty horse-power engine being employed for the purpose. Its capacity is from two hundred hides per week to one thousand per month. In its various departments twenty men are employed and seven and one-half tons of bark consumed daily. A market for its products is found in New York. The manager of the establishment is Wilson Kistler, executor of the estate of Charles E. Kistler.

Hamilton Foundry, which is owned by F. B. Marsh & Brother, was established in 1848 by John Marsh, and is located northwest of the centre of the township, near Kellersville. Its products are plows, farm utensils, mill-gearing, stoves, etc. During its early history three moulders were employed, one pattern-maker, two plow-makers, a blacksmith and a machinist. The capacity of the foundry has since been doubled and much new machinery been added. The products of the shops find a ready market at home and in adjacent portions of the State. Isaac Marsh, soon after the establishment of the business, became a partner, and the firm later became Marsh & Slutter. Eugene Marsh purchased the interest of Levi Slutter, when the firm became John Marsh & Son. In 1880 the senior partner sold his interest to his son Horace, and E. B. Marsh & Brother became proprietors.

CHRIST CHURCH, HAMILTON (of the Lutheran and Reformed denominations.)—The history of the congregations now worshipping in Christ Union Church, Hamilton township, Monroe County, Pa., according to the old German records on hand, dates back to the year 1768, as, although, judging from the large number of communicants then already gathered, it would appear that one or probably both of these congregations must have had an existence previous to this time. The earliest baptism recorded bears date of February 12, 1763, and is the record of the Rev. J. A. Friedricus, Lutheran pastor. The first communion record, also by the Rev. Mr. Friedricus, bears date of 1768, and among the communicants there recorded we find the mother of the child baptized in 1763. These circumstances would lead us to infer that efforts were put forth as early as 1763, at least, looking toward the organization of the Lutheran Church in this place. The first evidences, however, of a permanent organization do not appear till 1768. That year finds thirty-seven names enrolled as communicants, and in the following year we find the names of seventy-three persons on the record, fifteen of which number were catechumens. The book from which this information is gathered was purchased in 1768 "for the use of the Lutheran and Reformed Congregations," and whilst the earliest communicants recorded by a Reformed pastor have the date of June 15, 1794, we would nevertheless infer from evidences which appear in various parts of this old book that the organization of the Reformed congregation dates back at least to 1768, and it may be that there exists somewhere a separate record of this congregation, which, however, we have been unable to find. It is a pity that these early records are so incomplete, and, in many respects, so imperfect, as with the meagre information on hand it is a difficult task to trace even the names of the ministers settled over these congregations in their early history.

In 1775 these congregations had assumed fair proportions and in that year three acres of land were secured to build thereon a church and school-house, and for a grave-yard. One acre of this land was presented to the congregations by Mr. Philip Bossard, a member of the Reformed Church, and the congregations purchased the other two acres, Mr. George Hartlieb, a member of the Lutheran Church, paying for one acre. A log church and a school-house were erected the same year, and prosperity seems to have attended their projects. The relations between the two congregations seem to have been harmonious, and in the years from 1775 to 1820 there seems to have been a steady growth in membership and also an accumulation of some wealth. In 1820 the congregations owned several hundred acres of land, which had come to them either through legacies or purchase, and in 1819, when probably they began to think about the erection of a new house of worship, the joint council sold a tract of land to Mr. Rudolph Trach for two thousand four hundred dollars, and in 1823 another tract was divided into nine separate lots and sold to different parties. The proceeds of this sale reached the sum of one thousand four hundred and sixty-eight dollars and five cents. These sums were divided among the congregations, share and share alike.

On May 28, 1829 the corner-stone of the present church was laid with appropriate ceremonies. On that occasion, and previous to the laying of the corner-stone, a series of rules and by-laws were adopted and signed in the presence of both congregations by the members of the joint church council. The following names are attached to this document:

The present church was dedicated November 6 and 7, 1830, by the pastors, the Rev. J. B. Gross, of the Lutheran Church, and the Rev. H. L. Hoffeditz, of the Reformed Church, assisted by several visiting clergymen. The church cost $3690.91. The Lutheran congregation was chartered by the State in 1816. The Reformed congregation also has a charter from the State, but we have not been able to learn its date.

The Lutheran congregation owns a parsonage lot, near the church, of sixteen acres of land. The present parsonage was built in 1837.

The Reformed congregation owns a parsonage property in the village of Sciota, about one mile from the church.

The Hamilton Church is properly called the "mother-church," in this county, of the Lutheran and Reformed congregation, Brodheadsville; the Lutheran Church, Bartonsville; St. Mark's Union Church, Appenzell; St. Paul's Union Church, Tannersville; the Union Church, Cherry Valley; the Reformed congregation, Stroudsburg; the Union Church, Ross township.

These congregations are composed largely of members that were formerly connected with the Hamilton Church, and probably one-third of the members of the Albright Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this part of the county received their first religious training in this church.

CHERRY VALLEY METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Prayer-meetings were held as early as 1830. There being no church of this denomination in the valley at this time, these meetings were held at the houses of Peter Butts, Conrad Kemmerer, John Kemmerer, David Edinger and others. John Kemmerer was the first class-leader, and was succeeded by Samuel Gish. The early Methodists met with great opposition and endured great trials. They were a faithful, zealous people, many of whom lived to help build a church and enjoy the blessing of God. At this time they were joined with the Stroudsburg Circuit, and it was not until 1843 that Cherry Valley was made a separate circuit and Rev. Mahlon H. Sisty appointed to the charge. The church edifice was erected during this year and the site procured from Peter Shaw, on the south side of mound used for burial in the valley.

The first trustees were Michael Keiser, John H. Kemmerer, David Edinger, John Kemmerer and Samuel Gish. The builders were Joseph Nauman, stone mason, and Charles Kemmerer, carpenter. The church edifice was completed and dedicated the 4th and 5th of November, 1843. Cherry Valley was at this time a mission and belonged to the Reading District. The separation of Cherry Valley from Stroudsburg was not thought expedient and a return to the old arrangement was thought advisable; therefore Cherry Ridge and Paradise were included with Stroudsburg, under the name of Stroudsburg. In 1851–52 Stroudsburg became a station, and Cherry Valley included several other points, under the name of Cherry Valley Circuit. On June 14, 1856, the first quarterly meeting of the Cherry Valley Circuit was held. In 1859 N. M. Harmer was chosen superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and was succeeded by Christian Kemmerer. In 1863 arrangements were made for building a parsonage, during the pastorate of Rev. Alfred A. Fisher. In 1868 the church was called to mourn the death of two of its oldest members—Sarah Overpeck, who was identified with early Methodism in the valley, and was indeed a "Mother in Israel" (she died at the age of ninety-four), and Susanna Kemmerer, a woman faithful to the church.

In 1880 the membership of the Cherry Valley Circuit was one hundred and forty-one, an increase of ninety-one since 1853. In 1880 the question of erecting a new church edifice was agitated, and a subscription list was headed by Michael Keiser with one thousand dollars; but that good man died in 1883, yet left by bequest five hundred dollars to the church. In that year, under the pastorate of Rev. Henry Frankland, a site was chosen upon which the present church edifice was erected in 1885, the corner-stone being laid on Sunday, July 5th. The structure cost three thousand six hundred and twenty-nine dollars, and was dedicated with impressive ceremonies, many visiting clergymen from Philadelphia and other places being present.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This association was formed under Rev. Christian Gingrich, who held a series of meetings, first in the Snydersville School-house, and later in the carpenter shop of George Slutter, where a room had been fitted and made convenient for religious services. About three years later a commodious brick edifice was erected under the direction of a board of trustees, consisting of H. A. Werkheiser, Henry Roaeder and George P. Fisher, at a cost of eight hundred and seven dollars. A debt which was at that time incurred has since been liquidated. The pastors who have served the church are, as nearly in succession as it is possible to recall them, as follows: Revs. Christian Gingrich, Elias Miller, George P. Fisher, Joshua Fry, Blattenbaher, Garmer, Joseph Gross, Chub, Thomas Harber, F. P. Lehr, W. A. Leyboldt, Enos Miller, Isaac Zimmerman, Titus Hess, David Hambright, Kint, L. N. Worman, Henry Schultz, Isaac Yeakle, G. P. Fisher, Guinter, Rumburger, Spiker and Henry Rumboldt. The present trustees of the church are H. A. Werkheiser, Amos Frantz and Henry Shoemaker. The organization has for many years been quite prosperous, though the membership is at present small. A Union Sunday-school, which is well sustained, is held during the summer months. The present class-leader is Henry A. Werkheiser.

CHAPTER XIV.

CHESTNUTHILL TOWNSHIP.[1]

THE first official information relative to the erection of Chestnuthill township appears in the Quarter Sessions Docket of Northampton County. This docket shows that on September 20, 1763, Abraham Smith was appointed constable of Chestnuthill township. It is the most regular in outline of the townships of Monroe County, and contains about twenty-three thousand acres, most of which is susceptible of cultivation. It lies directly east from Polk, having Ross to the south, Tunkhannock on its northern, and Jackson and Hamilton on its western border.

Many small streams that rise out of or near the Pocono Mountain flow into and through the township. The largest is McMichael Creek, which is formed by the confluence of Hippy and Bower Creeks, near its northeastern corner, and flows southward to within one mile of the southern line, where it turns and flows eastward into Hamilton township. The western half of this area is drained by Sugar Hollow Creek, a stream which, rising on the southern slope of the Pocono Mountain, flows southward and parallel with McMichael Creek, turning westward into Polk township at about one mile from the southern boundary of the township.

A water-shed, running through the township from north to south, separates these two streams and their branches, the waters of McMichael's Creek finding their way into the Delaware River, and those of the Sugar Hollow to the Lehigh River. Never-failing springs are found on many of the farms, which flow through other farms, so that the surface is well-watered. Several small lakes are found in the township, chief among which are Minneola and Wire Spring Lakes, being about two miles distant from each other. Lake Minneola has neither inlet nor outlet that is visible, being fed by springs which rise beneath its surface. It doubtless has a subterranean outlet through the coarse drift deposits to McMichael Creek, which flows by it, one-quarter mile eastward.

The elevated portions of the soil are gravelly, while in the valleys we find it mostly clay. The soil in the northern part of the township has a reddish color. South of this, yellow predominates till it strikes the "round stone creek" soil in the southern part.

The surface of the township is uneven, being broken by numerous ridges of high hills. Agriculture is the chief employment of the people. Many of the cultivators of the soil are of German descent, and no township in the county can boast of more highly cultivated and productive farms than Chestnuthill.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The names of the early settlers of Chestnuthill township, and with whom its history is intimately blended, are George Hood, Conard Kresge, William Serfass, Adam Hufsmith, Sebastian Brong, Patrick Daily, Philip Kresge, Philip Gearhart, C. H. Brodhead, Daniel Brown, Henry

[1] By Cicero Gearhart, Esq.

Siglin, Felix Weiss, Samuel Rees, Henry Weiss, Joseph Green, Isaac Lester, Adam Hoodmaker and a host of others too numerous to mention, whose descendants are living in the township, on the places of their fathers.

George Hood, supposed to be the first settler in the township, located on lands now owned and occupied by Felix Storm. He purchased a tract of land from the old Moravians of Bethlehem, who had bought the flat lands west of Brodheadsville at an early date. On this he built a small log cabin of the timber felled in clearing the soil. He was the father of five children, viz.,—George, Magdalene (married to Andrew Storm), Margaret (married to Henry Fenner), Ann (married to Adam Hufsmith) and Catharine (married to Joseph Lester). George succeeded to his father's estate. The first township elections were held at his house. In those days the interest manifested in an election was estimated by the number of battles fought at the polls. After the polls were closed a party was held, and dancing was engaged in till nearly daylight the next morning. George Hood was the father of four children, viz.,—George (who died single), Susan (married to Samuel Shafer), Mary (who died at an early age) and Elizabeth (married to Lawrence Siglin).

Adam Hufsmith was the first to settle in the valley, and located on the farm where William H. Fenner now lives. He was four times married and had ten children. The names of the children are as follows: Jacob, Peter, Philip, Adam, Lizzie (who had married David Fisher), Margaret (married to Adam Arnold, whose descendants are Emanuel and Charles), Maria (married to Henry Weiss), Eve (married to Peter Serfass), Julia (married to Charles Haney, and was the mother of Felix, Daniel and Edwin Haney) and Katie (married to Michael Lilly).

Jacob married Sallie Arnold and was blessed with eleven children, viz.: John, who lived a single life; Charles, who married Lydia Keller, and had eight children, viz.: Maria (married to Theodore Altemose), Sarah (married to Roman Shafer), Ellen (married to Cicero Siglin), Hannah (married to Marian Detrick), Etna, Charles, Cora and Gusta; Jacob, who married Sarah Keller, and had one child, succeeded to his father's estate, where he now lives; Julia, married to George Seiger; Hannah, married to David Srovel; Sallie, married to William F. Edmonds; Katie, married to Joseph Brong; Eve, married to Charles Edmonds; Maria, married to William Sebring; Margaret, married to Edwin R. Gearheart; and Abraham, who married Mary Ann Rinker and had ten children, none of whom are now living in the township. Peter succeeded to his father's estate, and took to wife Miss Sallie Shoemaker. They were the parents of seven children, viz.,—Peter, Adam, Henry, Elizabeth (married to David Kresge), Mary (married to Peter Laufer), Caroline (married to Joel Kresge), Julia (married to John Haney) and Sarah (married to George Miller). Peter, Adam and Henry left the township at an early age. Philip married Hannah Bussard, and was the father of six children, none of whom are living in the township. Adam married Elizabeth Christman, and died without issue.

William Serfass, the ancestor of the Serfass family, settled on the farm where Charles Serfass, a grandchild, now lives. He is said to have had a son named William.

William married Margaret Everitt, and had ten children, viz.,—Sallie, married to Peter Berger; Samuel; William, who had thirteen children, viz.,—Catharine, Margaret (married to Linford Overpeck), George, William, Mary, Charles, Joseph, Simon, Sally (married to Amos Rhodes), Franklin, Christian, Maria (married to Daniel Andrews) and Jacob; Margaret, the fourth child of William Serfass, was married to Jacob Dorshimer; Elizabeth, married to John Swartz; Mary Ann, married to Michael Getz; Charles, who had twelve children, viz.,—Peter, Margaret, William, Berlin, Charles, Cornelius, Julia, Amanda, Sophia, Emma, Carrie and Francis; Catharine, married to Peter Frailey; Julia, married to Abraham Shiffer; and Daniel, who had four children, viz.,—Jane (married to Emanuel Durpass), Jackson D., John and Julia.

About 1745 Conrad Kresge's father settled at Effort. Conrad became the owner of his father's estate and had ten children, viz.: Conrad, John, Margaret (married to Jacob Slifer), Philip, Charles, Daniel, Peter, Elizabeth (married to Geo. Butz), and George and Katie. Conrad went to Ohio while yet a young man. John was scalped by the Indians one morning while working with his father on "new ground." George and Katie both died at an early age. Peter was the father of eleven children, viz.: Milly (married to John Barehold); Mary (who died single); Timothy (who married Julia Shiffer and had four children,—two boys and two girls), Sebastian (who married Catharine Kunkle, and was the father of six children), Peter (who lives in Kansas), Elizabeth (married James Kunkle), Owen (who married Eva Christman), Spearing and Nathan H. (who are both in Kansas), Susan (married to John Graver) and Amanda (who died young). Daniel had five children, viz.: Franklin, Freeman, Sophia, Sarah and Gusta. Charles is the father of Perry, Charles, Tilghman and Franklin Kresge, and of Gusta (wife of Levi Keller) and Elizabeth (married to Amandus Getz).

Between the years 1775 and 1780 Sebastian Brong, who had come from Bucks County, settled on McMichael Creek, on premises now owned by Joseph Brong. He is known to have had eight children, viz.: Peter, Jacob, Adam, Sebastian, Susan (married to Felix Weiss), Barbary (married to Jacob Dorshimer), Catharine (married to Peter Miller) and John.

Of these, Jacob and Sebastian lived in the township and had families. Joseph Brong is a son of Jacob, and married Catharine Hufsmith, and was blessed with eleven children, viz.: William, Sarah, Hannah, Mary Ann, Charles, Emma, Julia, Savannah, John, Million and Nathan. Sebastian Brong, brother of Jacob Brong, married Margaret Kresge, and was the father of nine children, viz.: Philip, Sallie, Amelia, Angeline, Sebastian, Elias, Oliver, Emma and Elizabeth.

Henry Siglin was one of the first settlers at McIlhaney village. He had six children, viz.: Jesse, John, George, Jacob, Frederick and Elizabeth (married to Adam Getz).

Jesse, the oldest son, settled on the farm where his son Samuel now lives. He had ten children, viz.: Charles, Daniel, Mary, Lawrence, Henry, Susan, Julia, Samuel, Abraham and Hannah. Of these, Lawrence, Henry, Hannah, Samuel and Abraham are living in the township and have families.

The first steps the early settlers took to get possession of the soil (which originally belonged to the Indians) was by making application to the rulers of the province of Pennsylvania for a warrant for the survey of the land selected, paying at the same time a certain per cent. of the purchase money down. A warrant was then issued, giving the surveyor-general of the province authority to survey a tract of land corresponding in quantity to what was asked for in the settler's application.

"THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, ss:

"Whereas, A. B. of the county of —— hath requested to take up —— acres of land, in —— township, in the county of —— (provided the land is not within the last purchase made of the Indians,) for which he agrees to pay, immediately, into the office of the Receiver General, for the use of this State, at the rate of —— per hundred acres, in Gold, Silver, Paper Money of our State, or Certificates, agreeably to an act of Assembly, passed the first day of April, 1784, and to an act passed the third day of April, 1792, entitled an act for the sale of vacant lands within this Commonwealth. Interest to commence from the ——.

"These are, therefore, to authorize and require you to survey, or cause to be surveyed, unto the said A. B., the said quantity of acres, if not already surveyed or appropriated, and to make return thereof into the Secretary's Office, in order for confirmation, for which this shall be your warrant.

"In witness whereof, Thomas Mifflin, Governor of the said Commonwealth, hath hereunto set his Hand, and caused the Less Seal of the said Commonwealth to be affixed, the —— day of —— in the year ——.

"To Daniel Brodhead, Esq., Surveyor General."

In pursuance of the survey, a patent deed was granted to the settler which fully vested the title in him.

After full title to their lands was thus obtained, the early settlers devoted themselves with might and main to the clearing of the land.

The houses were built of logs, the interstices between were filled up with mud. The bare ground, trodden down hard, often served as a floor. The first floor generally consisted of two rooms—one being the kitchen and the other a bed-room. The second floor was reached by a step-ladder. In the kitchen there was a huge fire-place, generally in the partition wall between the two lower rooms, and a large chimney pointed from the middle of the roof. The clothes worn by the early settlers were all home-made. Linen was worn during the summer and woolen in winter. The women did the spinning and often the weaving. In every household the hum of the spinning-wheel could be heard from early in the morning till late at night. In some houses three or four spinning-wheels could be found. After calico became cheap, women commenced to wear it, and many a lass boasted of a calico dress. Nearly all the people wore home-made clothes till 1855 or 1865.

Landlords used to have frolics every Saturday evening. It was seldom that a frolic was held where there were not several fights. "Corn matches" were made by farmers to husk corn in the day and have a frolic in the evening, and the dancing was often kept up till near daylight.

CHURCHES.—There are five buildings in the township dedicated to the service of the Almighty God, viz.: The old Chestnuthill, or Salem Church, near Gilbert's; St. John's Church, at Effort; St. Mark's Church, at Brodheadsville; Union Church, at Keller's Mills; and Evangelical Church, near McMichael's.

THE SALEM CHURCH is a union church, the building and lands of the church being owned in equal right by Reformed and Lutheran congregations. The organization of this church antedates the recollections of the oldest members, and a complete chronology of the same cannot be found. The first church was built in 1805. The building committee consisted of Henry Everitt, Philip Kresge (Reformed), George Kunkle and John Serfass (Lutheran). The builders were Frederick Case and his three sons,—Conrad, John and Charles. A second church was built in 1872, at a cost of ten thousand dollars.

The pastors regularly serving the Reformed congregation from its organization to the present time are as follows: Eilenmoyer, Boomp, Hofenditz, Decker, Becker, Daniels, Huber and Smith. The Lutheran pastors for the same time have been Faunderslot, Mensing, Gross, Heilig, Smalsey, Grow, Yeager, Struntz, Weber and Strauss.

The cemetery belonging to this church is located across the street and contains about one acre. The oldest tombstone bears this inscription,—

"In Memory Jacob Esh, Died April 11, 1808.
"Aged 30 years."

ST. MARK'S CHURCH.—Some time previous to 1860 divine worship was held in private houses in the vicinity of Brodheadsville. In that year C. D. Brodhead was instrumental in raising, by subscription, sixteen hundred dollars toward building a church. Encouraged by this success, a congregation was organized and C. D. Brodhead, Harrison Snyder and Rudolph Weiss were selected as building committee. The ground upon which the church stands was donated for that purpose by Rudolph Weiss. The building was finished and dedicated in 1862. The cost of the church building was about twenty-five thousand dollars.

The Reformed pastors have been G. B. Dechant, Charles Becker, Daniel Sheodler, T. A. Huber and Rev. Kretzing, the present pastor. On the Lutheran side we find Henry S. Seifert, Rev. Focht, Rev. Roth and the present pastor, Rev. Clair.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH.—This is a Union Church, the building belonging to Reformed and Lutheran congregations. It was built in 1872, at a cost of about two thousand dollars.

UNION CHURCH.—This building is owned in equal right by Evangelical and Methodist Episcopal denominations. The first regular pastors for these congregations were Rev. Zimmerman and Rev. Illman, respectively. The building was erected in 1872.

SCHOOLS.—The first school-house in this township was built in 1806, on a spot of ground now belonging to the Salem Church Cemetery. It was a double house. The teacher and family lived in one half and the school was held in the other. It is said that the first teacher in this house was a Mr. Kotz. He was succeeded in 1810 by Frederick Stiner, a native of Germany, who taught about fifteen years. Instruction was imparted in both the English and German languages. About 1810 a second school building was erected near Keller's Mills. At present there are thirteen school-houses in the township.

VILLAGES.

BRODHEADSVILLE is the oldest village in the township and is accessible by stage from Stroudsburg, Lehighton and Weissport daily.

The land where this village now stands was granted by "the Honorable the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania" to William Serfass in fee. His descendants are still living in the village. The first store was started by Michael Meisner on the lot now owned and occupied by John T. Stotz.

Adam Hufsmith, a short time after, started a store where Reuben Weiss now lives. Since that day the village has had two stores, the former known as "upper store," and the latter as "lower store." Charles Brodhead and Daniel Brown purchased the "upper store" and run the same two years, under the firm-name Brodhead & Brown, when Brodhead died and the firm changed to Brown & Co. This firm kept the first hotel and run both store and hotel until 1848, when C. D. Brodhead became the sole owner of same. His store was well known throughout the whole western part of the county. He had teams constantly on the road "hauling store goods" from Easton, and many trips were even made to Philadelphia, a distance of about eighty-six miles. The village was named after him, which previous to 1862 was called "Shafer's." Linford Heller became the owner of the store and hotel in 1865, when Mr. Brodhead moved to Stroudsburg, where he still lives. The store is now owned by John T. Stotz. His stock is large and complete, of the latest styles, and is displayed in such an artistic manner that it forms one of the most attractive stores in the city. Davis Everitt is the present proprietor of the hotel.

The "lower store" was successively owned and run by Adam Hufsmith, Charles Springer, Adam Utt, Daily & Tumbler, Lewis Sox, Charles Sensenbach and John J. Stecker, the present merchant.

ACADEMY.—Among the things of which Brodheadsville may be justly proud are its superior educational advantages. Fairview Academy was planned and built in the spring and summer of 1881 by Professor George G. Kunkle. The first session opened in August, 1881, with an attendance of sixty students for the first year. There are three courses of study, viz.: Preparatory, college preparatory and academic. Students who complete college preparatory and academic courses receive the diploma of the academy. The present instructors are T. H. Serfass, principal and Miss M. C. Strauss, assistant.

MINNEOLA LODGE, NO. 365, KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, was organized in 1872. Charter was granted June 6th of the same year. The first installed officers of Minneola Lodge, No. 365, are as follows:

J. Ingraham Allender, V. P.; W. H. Rinehart, W. C.; C. Burnett, V. C.; Abraham Bryan, R. S.; George W. Drake, F. S.; William S. Rees, B.; Samuel Hoffman, G.; N. C. Miller, O. S.

At the last election of the lodge the following persons were elected as officers: George Miller, C. C.; Charles J. Shafer, V. C.; John T. Stotz, P.; William H. Barthold, M. A.; William Serfass, M. F.; Jerome Arnold, M. of E.; Jonas B. Miller, K. of R. and S. Regular meetings held Saturday night of each week.

EFFORT is a little giant village in the stride it has made in the past few years, toward a solidity and importance rivaling the oldest points in the township. One of the most successful merchants, J. D. Serfass, can look with pride upon the few years he has spent in the mercantile trade. The village has two schools, two stores, hotel, shoemaker shop, blacksmith shop, wheelwright shop, spoke factory, grist-mill, foundry, millinery-shop and post-office.

MCMICHAEL'S is a small hamlet situated near the source of McMichael's Creek, and contains two stores, hotel, saw-mill, post-office and blacksmith shop.

MCILHANEY is situated in the southeastern part of the township. It has a store, post-office, hotel, school and blacksmith shop.

PLEASANT VALLEY.—The post-office was taken from Long Valley to this village, in 1864, by Jacob K. Shafer, who opened the first store in 1851. John Kerchner started the first hotel in 1847. The village contains store, hotel, academy, blacksmith shop, wheelwright shop and shoemaker shop.

GRIST-MILLS—There are four grist-mills in the township, viz.: The Brodheadsville Mill, owned and run by Geisinger & Bro.; the Wagner Mill, owned and run by John Wagner; the Keller Mill, run by Cicero Siglin; and the Altemose Mill, owned and run by F. H. Altemose.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.—The following persons have been elected justices of the peace since 1840:

1840. Peter S. Altemose.	1859. James Kresge.
Philip Kresge.	1863. Felix Storm.
1845. Henry H. Weiss.	1864. Samuel Arnold.
Philip Kresge.	1868. Felix Storm.
1847. Henry H. Weiss.	1869. Samuel Arnold.
1850. J. E. Hoodmaker.	1874. Samuel Arnold.

ROADS.—The earliest and most important road is the old Wilkes-Barre and Easton turnpike. It was constructed about the year 1808, and continued to be the property of the company that built it till about 1860, when it was abandoned, since which time the township has kept it in repair. One of the mile-stones remains standing a short distance north of the village of Effort. All the early travel between the Wyoming Valley and Easton and Philadelphia was done over this road. The township contains many good roads. Owing to the imperfect manner in which the early records were made, we are not able to fix the dates of their opening.

CHAPTER XV.

ROSS TOWNSHIP.[1]

THIS township lies next west from Hamilton and borders Northampton County on the south, Eldred on the west and Chestnuthill on the north. The drainage is nearly all westward into the Lehigh River, through Aquanchicola Creek and its tributaries. This stream rises a little west of "Ross Common" tavern, thence runs some eighteen miles southwest and empties into the Lehigh, at the Gap. Frantz Creek flows west through the centre of the township. It heads in an old drift-filled valley, where the divide between it and the water flowing eastward to the Delaware through McMichael Creek is almost imperceptible, there being an extensive swamp nearly on the crest of the divide, out of which Frantz Creek issues westward, while to the north, and separated from it by only a low ridge of drift, the waters of Lake Creek flow eastward.

MINERALS.—The Bossardville limestone is extensively quarried just west from the village of Saylorsburg. Messrs. Lessig, Altimus, Mackes, Schoch and others have quarries.

On the land of Samuel Lessig quite a large deposit of brown hematite iron-ore has lately been developed under the superintendency of Mr. Nelson Le Barre, of Portland, who, seeing ore scattered over the surface, leased the land from Mr. Lessig and went to work systematically to search for the main body of the same. Almost the first trial-hole sunk resulted in striking a body of flat-ore which comes in layers, and descends almost vertically, except that the layers are frequently curved and bent from side to side. A second shaft was sunk a few rods southwest from the last, in which the ore is more silicious than that in the other shaft.

On the land of Bouser Brothers (Simon and William) many hundred dollars have been expended in a fruitless search for anthracite coal, several entries having been driven into the base of Dodendorf Mountain, on its northern side, just south from Frantz Creek. A company from New Jersey have lately leased considerable land in the township, and intend to make a thorough search for coal and iron. The company will commence its first operations on the farm of Simon Bouser.

Agriculture is the chief employment of the people. Considerable attention has been given, of late, to improved varieties of stock, of horses, cattle and sheep, and the stock now seen on many of the farms compares favorably with the finest cattle herds of the country. Oats, corn, rye and buckwheat are the principal grains. Good crops of wheat are generally raised on the creek flats.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.—The first settlers of Ross were German-speaking people, who crossed the mountain from Northampton County about the middle of the last century. It was at one period the home of a well-known Delaware chief, old Captain Harris, father of Teedyuscung, king of the Delawares, during their alienation from the English.

A man by the name of Sheridine is said to have been the first settler in this township. He came, with his family, from Northampton County and located at Spring, on farm now owned by George Kleintop.

Joseph Altemose, a German by birth, was the first to settle on the property where Marsh's grist-mill now stands. He located at this place about 1770. His parents died at sea, on the voyage to this country, and he and his sister were the only survivors of the family. She became the wife of Abraham Smith, the first settler at Kunkletown, Eldred township. He was the father of Nicholas Altemose, who had four sons, viz.: Michael, Peter, Nicholas and Adam. Michael married a Miss Starner. He built a grist-mill, said to have been the first grist-mill in the township. The saw-mill was built by his father some years previous. Michael Altemose was the father of five children, viz.: Jacob, Adam, Joseph, Michael and Peter. Peter left the township at an early age. Nicholas had four children, viz.: Thomas, Henry, Charles and Nicholas. Adam is the father of George W. Altemose and Amanda, wife of John Shiffer. Jacob Altemose, oldest son of Michael Altemose, married Elizabeth Greenamoyer, and was blessed with eight children, viz.: Linford, Thomas, Ephraim, Adam, Elizabeth (married to George B. Weiss), Catharine (married to Henry Kintz), Sarah Jane (married to Charles Sensenbach), and Lydia Ann (married to Joseph Butz).

John Andrew, one of the early settlers, located on the farm now owned and occupied by Joseph Kresge. He had seven children—three boys and four girls. The names of the sons are as follows: Jacob, Daniel and Peter. Jacob succeeded to his father's estate, and was the father of three children, viz.: Lucinda (who married Joseph Kresge, and lives with her husband on the old homestead), Charles (who moved to Weatherly, Pa.) and Maria (married to Jacob K. Shafer). Daniel had two children, one of whom, John, is living in the township. Peter was the father of ten children, none of whom are now living in the township.

About 1790 Philip Lessig settled on the Aquanchicola Creek, where Samuel Lessig now lives. He had married Elizabeth Meckas, and was the father of John Lessig. John succeeded to his father's estate, and in 1835 built a grist-mill, which is now owned and run by his son, Samuel Lessig. A few years previous he built a saw-mill, which is also owned by Samuel Lessig. This was the second grist-mill in the township. He married Margaret Mixsell, and was blessed with eleven children, viz.: Samuel (who married Lydia Shoemaker, succeeded to the old homestead, and has six children,—three boys and three girls), George (who lives at Tannersville, Pocono township), Peter (who married Lucy Correll, and has three children), Enos, Reuben, Philip, John, Mary Ann (married to Joseph Rudy), Elizabeth (married to Frank Donner), Susan (married to Daniel Custard) and Emma (married to George Meckas).

In this list Stoffle Christman, Adam Correll, George Flite and Samuel Frantz are assessed with saw-mills. The products of these mills were carried by wagons to Easton and other markets. As late as 1820 merchants had their supplies brought all the way from Philadelphia, a distance of about seventy-five miles, on wagons. It took them from Monday morning till Friday evening to make a trip. Four and six horses were driven in these "store teams," and often five and six such teams could be seen going together. The drivers took horse-feed and their own food along for the whole week. On the side of the wagon a small box was attached, in which hammer, pincers, nails, horse-shoes, bolts, screws, etc., were carried.

SCHOOLS.—The first school in this township was a German school, taught by a Mr. Keener. It was entirely supported by subscription, and the term lasted but three months. The children living north of Shafer's Hill, in the neighborhood of McIlhaney and Brodheadsville, attended this school till 1806 or 1807, when a school-house was built at Killer's Mills, mentioned in Chapter IV. of this work.

At present there are five school districts in the township. The school-house of District No. 1 is situated in the centre of the township. District Nos. 2 and 3 comprise the upper part of the township, Nos. 4 and 5 the lower part. In the year 1885 there were one hundred and eighty pupils enrolled. The schools are in a very prosperous condition.

The present school board consists of:

ROADS.—It is very probable that the oldest road in the township is what is known as the Ross Valley road, leading from Saylorsburg to Kunkletown. The Wilkes-Barre turnpike passes through the eastern part. All parts of the township are accessible by very good roads, which are in a very good condition.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.—The following is a list of the justices of the peace since 1845:

CHURCHES.—There is but one church building in the township. This building is the common property of Reformed and Lutheran congregations. It was built during the years 1884 and 1885, and is called the Mount Eaton Church. The land upon which it stands was purchased from Mary Hauser. The building committee consisted of Henry Altemose, Frank Rilbert, William Engler and Levi Buskirk. Rev. T. A. Huber, Reformed pastor, held the first communion in this building. The present pastors are Rev. Clair, Lutheran, and Rev. Kretzing, Reformed.

THE WIND GAP OF THE BLUE MOUNTAINS AND ROSS COMMON.—A very interesting locality in the topography of Monroe County is the Wind Gap of the Blue Mountains. Whilst not so deep a gap as the Delaware and Lehigh Gaps, the depression is sufficient to make it a desirable pass for the people who live on either side of the mountain, to travel through, to and fro, on business and pleasure.

The elevation of the summit of the mountain is nearly two thousand feet above tide. The pass through the Wind Gap is only about one thousand two hundred feet, and is a couple of hundred feet in width. The mountain then rises on each side of the pass, at an angle of forty-five degrees, eight hundred feet to the summit.

The view from the pass in the Gap is extremely fine, but that from the summit is grand beyond conception. Toward the south, and east and west, the lookout is only limited by the powers of vision. On a clear day Chestnut Hill and other high grounds about Philadelphia are plainly discernible, whilst east and west the counties of Northampton, Lehigh and Berks, and a large part of the State of New Jersey, are overlooked. On the north the mountains about Mauch Chunk, the Pocono Range and the Catskill Mountains along the Hudson River are easily distinguished. On the north side of the Wind Gap, and a few feet below the summit, in the Wind Gap Pass, is located the popular summer resort known as Ross Common, one of the most picturesque points, as regards scenery and climate, to be found in the State. The Mansion House, now used as a hotel, is a large stone building, erected early in the present century, by the Hon. John Ross (for a long time one of the justices of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania), as his country-seat. The Acquanchicola Creek, which rises about four miles east of Ross Common, nearly on the summit of the Blue Mountain, runs close by the hotel, and is a fine spring run, with very cold water, and abounding with trout. This stream for miles traverses only forests, and running along the north base of the mountain for a distance of eighteen miles, empties into the Lehigh at the Lehigh Water Gap. The Mansion House was a remarkable one in its day and generation, considering its remoteness from the large settlements. The ceilings are high and the rooms capacious, and every room has a large hearth or fire-place. A stone kitchen is constructed apart from the hotel, and connects with the dining-room by a stone passage-way. The mantels, doors, cornices and all the wood-work are handsomely carved after the fashion of that day.

When Judge Ross ceased to use Ross Common for himself and family, being on the Wilkes-Barre turnpike, it was utilized as a wayside inn, and during the old staging days had almost a national reputation for its hospitality and good cheer. Before railroads had come into use the business men of Wilkes-Barre and Wyoming Valley,—in fact, the majority of the business men of the Susquehanna Valley and its tributaries, —almost through to the lakes, found this route, over the Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike, the most comfortable and convenient way to reach the cities of New York and Philadelphia. The result was that a large number of stages were required for transportation, and frequently three and four Concord or Troy coaches followed each other daily, to and from Easton and Wilkes-Barre, loaded with the rich and the great of the north country. The general stage route was about as follows: Coaches left New York and Philadelphia early in the morning, arriving at Easton in the evening. A line from Philadelphia was also run to Bethlehem, and in the evening a coach took northbound passengers to Nazareth. Passengers were billed through from New York and Philadelphia, if desired, and had first choice of seats on all connecting lines. At Nazareth the passengers from Philadelphia, via Bethlehem, Allentown, Reading and the West, were taken on board, and the coaches wended their way to Ross Common, where an old-fashioned breakfast awaited them about seven A.M., and after such a ride was, no doubt, heartily enjoyed.

Here horses were exchanged, and the run continued to the top of Pocono, where for years, in a large solitary hostelry, in the midst of the "Huckleberry Barrens," one John Smith furnished dinners to the stage passengers and the traveling public of such an appetizing character that the host was famous from the valley of Wyoming;—yea, from the shores of Lake Erie—to the seaboard. Thence the coaches rolled on, mostly over corduroy roads, to Beaumont, or Beach Creek, where supper was furnished about six P.M., and thence on, in the evening, to Wilkes-Barre, where, at the famous old Phœnix Hotel (now replaced by the sumptuous Wyoming Valley Hotel), administered by an Alexander or a Gilchrist, a second supper of trout or grouse, partridge, woodcock or venison was deliberately enjoyed, and finally topped off with the hot scotches, mint juleps, brandy smashes and gin cocktails which the members of the bar in Wilkes-Barre know so well how to concoct. Then the day ended, and the jolly traveler was well fortified for his next day's journey. In going south the program was just reversed. Breakfast at Beaumont, or Bear Creek, dinner with John Smith, on Pocono Top; and supper at Ross Common, with glorious old "Jim Eley," of by-gone days; and "extras" at Easton, with Conner at the American, or with old "Chip" White at Centre Square Hotel.

But with the taking off of the stages, Ross Common dropped into an "innocuous desuetude." Its banquet halls were deserted. "Jim" Eley removed, to spend the evening of his life with the friends he had made in Wyoming Valley. For years the bats and the owls roosted on the rafters and chimneys of the old Ross Common Inn, and the traveler who paused to reflect over its departed greatness (so gloomy and sad was it about the "Old Stone Heap," as it was derisively termed) would be startled by the sound of his own voice. A few attempts were made by occasional landlords to revive the business, but the long range at which the whiskey and other strong drinks that were supplied to travellers would kill the drinkers made all such attempts fruitless. But, strange to say, the very same causes (railroads) which ruined the Ross Common of old have made a new Ross Common—livelier, lovelier and more desirable than that of old. There was a balm (not in Gilead, but in Bethlehem). One Charles Brodhead, an enterprising citizen of Bethlehem, who often passed Ross Common in his journeys to and from Pike County, was pleased with the capabilities of the place, and as he was then engaged in constructing a railroad from Bethlehem to the slate quarries about the Wind Gap, Pen Argyl and Bangor, etc., he purchased the "Old Stone Heap," and presto! change! it has become one of the most popular and profitable properties in the county. Painters, carpenters, masons and paper-hangers have remodeled the old place, and it is now a favorite stopping-place for the solid citizens of Monroe, who find their nearest railroad depot just beyond Ross Common, and their best market at the towns which Mr. Brodhead's railroad from Bethlehem to the Wind Gap has been the means of bringing into existence.

During the torrid days of summer, when the Monroe farmers who make Ross Common lively in the fall and winter, whilst taking their produce to market, are engaged in planting and gathering their crops, the halls and piazzas of Ross Common resound with the revelry of the gay and festive pleasure-seekers from the towns and citizens below the mountains, who resort to this place to enjoy the delightful waters, the magnificent scenery and the cooling, healthful, perennial breezes which have given this charming spot the suggestive and appropriate name of the "Wind Gap of the Blue Mountains."

CHAPTER XVI.

ELDRED TOWNSHIP.[1]

This township lies directly west from Ross and occupies the extreme southwestern corner of Monroe County, having Northampton on the south, Carbon on the west and Polk township on its northern border.

The rainfall is all drained westward to the Lehigh River through Aquanchicola Creek and its principal tributary, Frantz Creek. The latter drains all the northern half of the township and flows southwestward along the northern side of a ridge that runs through the southern part of the township, rudely parallel to Aquanchicola, which meanders along the southern side of the same ridge and through the valley at the foot of the Kittatinny Mountain. Westward from the centre of the township Aquanchicola and Frantz Creeks gradually approach each other until, at the Carbon County line, they are only two hundred rods apart. Frantz Creek cuts through the ridge at what is known as Little Gap and the two streams having united, the Aquanchicola keeps on to the Lehigh River at the Lehigh Water Gap.

The extreme northwestern portion of the township drains northward to the Big Creek.

The Bossardsville limestone appears in this township and has been quarried for many years on the land of Messrs. Rauch, Smith, Engler and others. It is not seen from Lessig's quarry, near the eastern line of Ross, as far westward as the above quarries, a distance of over five miles, and yet it could doubtless be uncovered at almost any locality between these two points. To the farmers who live along this region, where the limestone is apparently absent, it would be time well spent if a systematic search should be made, as it could probably be found by stripping off the surface debris over a few rods at most.

Several years ago a silicious clay was mined and manufactured in this township into what was sold as "soap." The material was passed through several vats filled with water until all the coarse sand-grains had been deposited and nothing remained in suspension but the impalpable silicious powder, which then accumulated by deposit, and from which was manufactured the so-called soap.

The Marcellus shale along Frantz Creek is often very bituminous. This is the case opposite Kunkletown, and it has there been extensively drifted upon in search of coal. Three tunnels were driven into the hill several hundred feet and the last material brought out looks very much like the carbonate of iron. The outcrop of the Marcellus at Kunkletown is quite black and has scattered through it thin streaks, a very impure kind of anthracite, which will burn with a slight blaze when placed on a hot fire, leaving a great bulk of slaty ash. The presence of these carbonaceous laminæ led to the search for coal, on which the sum of five thousand dollars has already been expended.

A bed of bog iron-ore occurs opposite Kunkletown, which was once manufactured into a very fine quality of metallic paint by Mr. Metzger. The deposit is very thin and seems to be quite local, since there is none on the opposite side of the ravine, only two rods distant. The ore is rich enough to warrant mining and shipping could it be found in sufficient quantity.

Division of the Township. — For some time prior to 1851 the project of dividing the township was agitated among its residents, and in May of that year a petition was drawn up, circulated and presented to the court, upon which Walter Barry and William S. Rees were appointed by the court as commissioners to inquire into the expediency of making the requested division. They reported that on the 10th day of September, 1851, they met and surveyed and marked a line as follows: "Beginning on the line now dividing Polk and Chestnuthill townships from Ross township, at the corner of Polk and Chestnuthill townships; thence (running the same course of the line between said townships of Polk and Chestnuthill which divides said township) south twenty-six degrees east five miles to the top of the Blue (or Kittatinny) Mountain, the line dividing Northampton and Monroe Counties, being also the southerly line of said Ross township" (at which place they put up a good stone corner and marked it well).

The surface of this township is generally hilly and broken, in some parts mountainous, with occasional level plateaus as you approach the heads of the streams. There are no continuous mountain ranges which can be distinctly traced, but a succession of ridges and hills, irregular in outline and deeply indented by small streams, which indicate the close proximity of a mountain range. There is considerable flat land along the larger streams.

In early times the greater part of this township was covered with forests, and lumbering was largely engaged in by the first settlers. The woods that remain are mostly situated on the tops and sides of hills and consist mainly of chestnut timber, with here and there tracts of hickory, oak and white oak, interspersed with pine, maple, ash, walnut, birch and wild cherry.

The first frame house built in the township was erected by Thomas Christman in 1843, who is still living in the same. The barns are mostly frame, with stone basements, and generally quite capacious.

The inhabitants are the descendants of German settlers, who still speak the Pennsylvania German language. They belong to Reformed and Lutheran Churches.

Early History.—Undoubtedly the celebrated Moravian missionary, Count Zinzendorf, was the first white man who set foot within the limits of what is now Eldred township. On the 28th of July, 1742, he crossed Chestnuthill Mountain and entered the narrow valley of the Aquanchicola. Here he came to a Delaware town of the Indians, called Meniolagomeka, which signifies, "a tract of fertile land surrounded by barriers." This village lay in Smith's Valley, eight miles west of the Wind Gap, on the north bank of the Aquanchicola, at the intersection of the old Wilkes-Barre road, which crosses the mountain at Smith's Gap. The grave-yard was one-eighth of a mile south of Mr. Edward Snyder's limestone quarries. Benjamin Smith, whose great-grandfather was one of the early settlers in that neighborhood, pointed out to us the sites of both village and graveyard. In October of 1743 Seyffert D. Nitschmann and N. Seidel visited both here and on the Pocopoco; Seyffert and Hagen in January, 1744; in June of that year Seyffert, P. Bohler and Henry Antes. In February, 1748, Rauch visited at Meniolagomeka. Bishop John M. de Watteville, on his visitation to the Moravians in America, in the last-mentioned year, passed through Meniolagomeka to the Pocopoco. April 25, 1749, George Rex, the captain of the village, while on a visit to Bethlehem, was baptized by Bishop Cammerhoff and received the name of Augustus. In 1750 Secretary Richard Peters urged his claim to the lands on the Aquanchicola, on which the village lay, and desired the Moravians to have the Indians removed. It was this that occasioned the exodus from Meniolagomeka to Gnadenhutten, on the Mahoning, in June of 1754. The missionary Bernhard A. Grube was stationed at Meniolagomeka in 1752. He was born in 1715, near Erfuth, and educated at Jena, and came to Pennsylvania on the "Irene" in June of 1746. At first he was employed in the schools at Bethlehem. While stationed at Meniolagomeka, he tells us, his awkwardness at handling an axe almost cost him a limb and confined him for weeks in a cold hut, where he lay on a board, with a wooden bowl for a pillow.

Abraham Bulminger was the last missionary in the Indian village. The inhabitants, when removed to Gnadenhutten and incorporated with the congregation of Christian Indians at that place, numbered fifty one all told. Meniolagomeka is mentioned in the "General History" of this work.

The names of the early settlers of Eldred township, whose descendants are still living in the township, are Christman, Silfiese, Berger, Shmale, Frantz, Carrell, Barlieb, Greenzweig, Getman, Kunkle, Smith, Frable and others.

Abraham Smith came from Bucks County and settled in what is now Kunkletown village, on property now owned and occupied by Peter S. Metzgar. He married a Miss Altemose, whose parents died at sea on their voyage to this country. She was a sister of Mr. Altemose, who is the ancestor of all of that name in Ross township. Abraham Smith had one son, John, who married Miss Mary Box and had ten children, viz.: John, David, Jacob, Adam, Henry, Joseph, Nicholas, Jonas, Eve (married to John Heiny), Susan (married to Jacob Carrell).

John married Mary Frantz and was the father of twelve children, four of which are living in the township, viz.: Henry, Reuben, Elias and Mary. David married Nancy Heiny. They were the parents of seven children, viz.: Jacob, Frank, James, Thomas, Michael, Mary (married to George Rilbert) and Susan (married to Joseph Marsh). Jacob took as his wife Katie Frantz, and had eight children, viz.: George, Adam, Samuel, Katie (married to Samuel Metzgar), Sally (married to John Carrell), Susan (married to Joseph Butz), Juddie (married to William Hinton) and Mary (married to George Kern). Adam married Mary Borger, and had seven children, viz.: Melchior, Henry, Samuel, David, Elizabeth (married to George Meixell), Fanny (married to Samuel Fannickel) and Susan (married to Daniel Beltz). Henry married Libbie Andrew, and had five children, viz.: Benjamin, Sydenham, Christianna (married to Edward Engler), William and Matthews. Joseph married Katie Muffly. They were the parents of ten children, viz.: Paul, Christian, Ishadore, Amos, Gideon, Lydia (married to William Simmons), Mary (married to David Carrell), Rachel (married to Henry Carrell), Julia (married to Linford Beer) and Leah (married to John Leeter). Nicholas married Catharine Getman, by whom he had eight children, viz.: Peter, John, Aaron, Charles, Alexander, Nathan, Mary (married to Philip Carrell) and Sallie (married to Daniel Frantz). Joseph took as his wife Mary Strohl, and was the father of nine children, viz.: Jacob, Nelson, Peter, Levi, Jonas, Solomon, Lucinda (married to Reuben Silfiese), Salina (married to Uriah Shell) and Julia (married to Levi Rauch).

Moses Frable, an Englishman by birth, located, at an early date, on the property where James Heiny now lives. He was the father of George Frable, who married a Miss Buck, and had five children, viz.: Joseph, John, David, Conrad and George. Joseph married Mary Moyer, and had fourteen children, viz.: Elizabeth (married to Christian George), Timothy, Mathias, Jacob, Jefferson, Washington, Solomon, Reuben (present landlord at Kunkletown), Annie (married to Nelson Smith), Levi, Joseph, James, William and Sarah (married to Amos Roth). John married Elizabeth Frantz. They were blessed with ten children, viz.: Susan (married to Paul Burger), Paul, Adam, Michael, Mary (married to Joseph Borger), Elizabeth (married to Barnet Frantz), Lydia (married to Alexander Smith), John, Peter and Salina. David married Maria Gower, by whom he had five children, viz.: Anthony, Ephraim, Maria (married to John Fenner), Catharine and Elizabeth (married to Jacob Andrews). Conrad married Sally Beatty, and was the father of six children, viz.: Conrad, Ephraim, Charles, Aaron, Sally Ann (married to Daniel Lichtwalter) and Emma. George removed to Northampton County.

Adam Carrell, Sr., was a German by birth and the father of Adam Carrell, Jr., who located on the farm now owned by Henry Carrell, grandson of Adam Carrell, Sr. Adam Carrell, Jr., married Eve Buck, and had six children, viz.: Henry, John, Jacob, David, Philip and George, whose descendants are living in Eldred and Ross townships.

CHURCHES.—St. Matthew's Church, at Kunkletown, is the only church building in the township. Two congregations worship in this house

- Reformed and Lutheran. The first church building was a log house, raised October 27, 1779. Religious worship was held in private houses as early as 1770. April 14, 1786, the following persons were confirmed and made members of the church: Anna Maria Smale, aged fifteen years; Elizabeth Carrell, sixteen years; Sarah Margaret Kresge, seventeen years; Maria Febera, fourteen years; Anna Maria Christman, fourteen years; Margaret Hufsmith, seventeen years; Philip Meixell, nineteen years; John Meixell, seventeen years; John Smale, seventeen years; William Kresge, fifteen years.

The second and present building was erected in 1845. It is built entirely of stone, two stories high, and will seat six hundred people. The stone and wood for the building were furnished by members of the congregations free of charge. The pulpit is attached to the side of the north wall, and supported on two posts about nine feet high. It has room but for one person and is entered by two narrow flights of steps. The present pastors serving the congregations are Rev. Kretzing, Reformed, and Rev. Strauss, Lutheran.

Schools.—The first schools in the township were held in private houses till 1783, when a school-house was built near where St. Matthew's Church now stands. A Mr. Noah is said to have been the first teacher in this building. It was a square log house, with the desks fastened to the sides of the walls. The branches taught were writing, reading (German) and arithmetic. At present there are seven school districts in the township, viz.: Gower, Kleintop, Frantz, Christman, Barlieb, Smith Gap and Carrell. The average salary of teachers per month in 1885 was twenty-three dollars. The total receipts for same year amounted to $991.50, and total expenditures $966.72. The number of pupils enrolled in 1885 were one hundred and twelve males and ninety-eight females.

1852.—Henry Carrell, Joseph Borger, George Smahl, Anthony Gower, Adam Bruntzman, John Christman.
1853.—Jacob Smith, Philip Drumheller.

Roads.—The township is accessible by a number of very good roads, but owing to the imperfect manner in which the records were kept, the date of the opening of early roads can only be fixed approximately.

Kunkletown.—This is a small village situated in a beautiful valley, on the banks of Prince's Run, and has a very good water-power. It was named after Joseph Kunkle, one of the early business men of that place.

Among the first to settle in this village was Abraham Smith. He came from Bucks County in 1762 and built a grist-mill, now owned and run by Peter S. Metzgar. In 1812 a United States gun factory was started by Philip Hess, and was in operation till 1830. In 1857 Samuel Burger and Abraham Bleckler started a tannery on the same place where the musket factory stood. It was owned and run by different parties till 1877, when it was closed and has not since been started.

Joseph Kunkle was the proprietor of the first hotel in the village, which was opened in 1849. The following persons have been proprietors of said hotel, successively: Edward Roth, Aaron Bossler, Stephen Hess, Joseph Harah, John Frantz, Edward Frantz, Stephen Boyer, Elias Smith, William Christman and Reuben Frable, the present proprietor.

A store was opened by Thomas Snyder in 1832. At present there are four stores, owned and run by J. F. Pearsol, L. K. Patrick, P. P. Schaeffer and Nelson Heffelfinger. There are two blacksmith-shops in the village, one hotel, one wheelwright-shop and one grist-mill.

The Kunkletown post-office was established in 1864, with Joseph Johnson as postmaster. He was succeeded by John Hatter, who was followed by L. K. Patrick, the present incumbent.

The Kunkletown Cornet Band was organized in December, 1883, and consists of twenty-two pieces. The members are fully uniformed and have an appropriate band-wagon. William Roth, leader.

CHAPTER XVII.

POLK TOWNSHIP.[1]

At a Court of Quarter Sessions of the peace in 1846, John Shively, Franklin Starbird and William S. Rees, commissioners appointed by the court, reported that they had divided the township of Chestnuthill into two townships, commencing midway between Starner's Gap and the Wilkes-Barre turnpike, at the Tobyhanna township line and Pocono Mountains; thence by a straight line passing near the Chestnuthill meeting-house until it strikes the line dividing Ross from Chestnuthill township, near the Widow Garris'. The western part was named after James K. Polk, eleventh President of the United States, and is bounded on the east by Chestnuthill, on the south by Eldred and on the west and north by Carbon County.

Polk township is well drained by various creeks and rivulets. Little Creek, rising in the northwestern part of the township, flows south into Middle Creek, which rises in the northern part and flows south into the Big Creek. Pocopoco Creek rises west of Middle Creek and flows parallel with it, emptying into the Big Creek, which flows in a gentle stream through the southern part of the township. The valley of Big Creek is in many places a mile and a half wide, at almost a uniform level, except the immediate channel of the stream.

The surface is hilly and the soil fertile. The highest point in the township is on the Pocono Mountain and the Carbon County line, three hundred and eighty rods north of New Mechanicsville hotel. Well-cultivated fields testify to both the fertility of the soil and the persevering industry of the rural population, which is principally engaged in agricultural pursuits.

Early Settlements.—The territory of this township and adjoining townships was considerably overrun by the Indians during the early Indian wars. Upon several occasions the inhabitants were massacred by or fled before their savage enemies. They protected themselves as their numbers, and strength enabled them, by erecting forts at different points. Fort Norris was within the limits of this township.[2]

In 1760 the Moravians bought lands on Head's Creek, and thither transferred their Indian converts from Bethleham. This settlement was called Wequetanc and lay on the flats north of Wire Creek, about a quarter of a mile north of the State road, where the present road to Effort leaves said State road.

Frederick Hoeth, baker, from Zwibrucken, emigrated in 1748 and is registered with his wife, Johanette, among the members of the congregation in 1749. In 1750 he purchased seven hundred acres of land on Pocopoco Creek, in Loug Valley, and removed thither with his family in 1752. On December 10, 1755, his house was stealthily visited by five Indians while the family were at supper. Hoeth was killed and a woman wounded by the Indians firing a volley through the window. The rest of the family sought safety in flight and concealment. The Indians immediately set fire to the house, mill and stables. Mrs. Hoeth hid in the bake-house, to which fire was also applied. Enduring the heat and smoke as long as she could, the unfortunate woman ran out through the flames, and, to relieve her agony, leaped into the water, where she died, either from her burns or by drowning. A grown-up daughter was killed and scalped, and four other women taken as captives into the Indian country. In the affray one Indian was killed and one wounded. John Michael Hute, an apprentice in Hoeth's mill, made his escape through the tail-race and was the only survivor of the family to tell the horrible story. The mill was rebuilt and is now owned and run by Mahlon Kresge.

The early settlers of this township were chiefly Germans, and many of their descendants still reside here upon the ancestral estates. John Kunkle, a descendant of one of these families, is one of the most influential men in the township.

Nathan Serfass resides on the farm originally cleared and owned by his grandfather, John Serfass. Jacob Kresge, the oldest man living in the township, resides on his father's homestead with his grandson, who is the owner of the farm. Reuben Kresge, until recently, was the owner of the oldest property in the township, which had descended to him from his father, George Kresge. The same is now owned by William Gregory.

The precise date at which the first settlements were made cannot be obtained. A German, by the name of Philip Shupp, is said to have been the first settler. He located about one mile west of where Salem Church now stands, cleared a small tract of land and erected a log cabin upon it. This was about the middle of last century. He had several daughters and one son. The son left the township before he was grown up. George Kresge married one of the daughters and took the old homestead. They had two children,—Philip and Samuel. The mother died, and the father took a second wife, Miss Catharine Serfass, daughter of John Serfass. They had seven children, viz.: Thomas, James, Joel, David, Reuben, Sallie and Katie. Thomas moved at an early date to Luzerne County. James is living in Chestnuthill township. Joel is the proprietor of a hotel at Kresgeville, and the father of four children,—Charles A. (member of the firm of Berlin & Kresge), Henry, Tilghman and Emaline (intermarried with James Berlin). David died about ten years ago. He was the father of six children, viz.: Peter and Josiah (who live in Chestnuthill), Absalom (at Penn Argyl, Northampton County), Catharine (married William H. Small), Sallie (married to Melchior Silfiese) and Elizabeth. Reuben still lives in the township and is the father of two children,—Alfred and Catharine. Sallie is the wife of John Kunkle, and Katie was intermarried with John Gregory, of Chestnuthill township.

Among the names of the early settlers are those of Conrad Dotter, John George Kunkle, Conrad Dreisbach, John Serfass, William Kresge and others.

Conrad Dotter came from Bucks County and located at the place now called Dottersville. Many of his descendants are still living in the township.

John George Kunkle was the first settler at Kresgeville. He was a German by birth and emigrated to this country about 1740 or 1750. He had fourteen children, namely, Elizabeth (married to George Serfass), Katie (married to a Knecht), Maria (married to Solomon Christman), Bevy (married to John Slafer), Susan (married to John Smith), Margaret (married to John Winters), Christianna (married to Paul Beer); Sallie (married to George Kresge), George, Abraham, Peter, Joseph, Adam and John. John, the youngest of the family, is the only son now living in the township. He became the owner of the old homestead and lived upon it till he retired from business. He married Sallie Kresge, daughter of George Kresge, and was blessed with ten children, namely, Katie (married to Sebastian Kresge), William, James, Jacob, George, David, Sarah (married to Mahlon Serfass), Mary Ann (married to Reuben Kunkle), Ella (married to Pierce Kresge), and Emma (married to Jerome Serfass). William and David live on farms near Kresgeville. James and Jacob compose the firm of Kunkle & Bro., at Kresgeville. George is engaged in teaching, but expects to enter the ministry in the near future. He is a graduate from Muhlenberg College, Allentown, Pa., and the founder of Fairview Academy, at Brodheadsville, Chestnuthill township. In the years 1880 and 1881 he was principal of the public schools of Bethlehem, Pa.

Conrad Driesbach was an early settler at Kresgeville. He formed a partnership with John George Kunkle, which firm erected the first mills in that village. He had six children—five daughters and one son—namely, Elizabeth (married to Charles Shupp), Maria (married to George Hawk), Sallie (married to Philip Kresge); Liza (who died single), Susan (married to Frederick Shupp), and John. Sallie, the third daughter of Conrad Driesbach, was the mother of three children by her husband, Philip Kresge, son of George Kresge. Philip Kresge became the owner of his father-in-law's property. He had the first hotel in the township, and was the first postmaster at Kresgeville, which village was named after him. John, the only son and youngest child of the family, died at an early age, without issue.

John Serfass, a native of Germany, located on the farm now owned and occupied by his grandson, Nathan Serfass. He married Susan Hone and had thirteen children, namely, John, Joseph, Adam, George, Peter, William, David, Hannah, Sallie, Catharine, Christianna, Elizabeth and Thomas. John and Thomas are both dead, and none of their descendants live in the township. Andrew married Christianna Berger and had eight children, namely, Aaron, Joel, Charles, Ephraim, Linford, Emanuel, Elizabeth (married to John Smahle) and Fanny (married to Aaron Heiny.) George was the father of five children, namely, John, George, Susan (married to John Kerchner), Elizabeth (married to Amos Everitt), and Hannah (married to Peter Smith). Peter married Catharine Storm and had seven children, namely, Anna (married to Jacob Christman), Andrew (who moved to Luzerne County), Sarah (married to Henry Hawk), Hannah (married to Lewis Hawk), Elizabeth (married to Samuel Hawk), Franklin (who moved to Northampton County) and Nathan, who lives on the old homestead, married Susan Hawk, daughter of David Hawk, and had three children, namely, Jerome, Louisa and James J. His wife having died, he was married, a second time, to Miss Fanny Fisher, by whom he had one child, namely, Francis. William lived a single life, and died a middle-aged man. David married Sally Everitt and was the father of four children, namely, Henry, Barton, Solomon and Frederick. Hannah was married to William Kresge; Sallie was the wife of George G. Hawk; Catharine was the second wife of George Kresge, and Christianna was wedded to Conrad Driesbach; Elizabeth married John Eshen, of Northampton County; Thomas was married to a Miss Dotter and a few of his descendants are living in the township.

David Gregory settled on the farm now owned by his son William. He had ten children, namely, David, John, Reuben, Henry, Peter, James, William, Lydia (married to Thomas Kresge), Nellie (married to James Kresge), and Sallie (married to Jacob Kresge). John and William are the only sons still living. Reuben died in 1885. He had eight children, namely, Nathan, James, William E., Mary (who died single), Lydia (married to Levi Shupp), Elizabeth (married to Amos Shafer), Katie (married to Harry Loboch), Sallie (married to John Driesbach), and Lucinda (married to John Dorshimer.

William Kresge settled in Polk about 1765, on the farm now owned by his great-grandson, Rogers Kresge. He had eight children, viz.: Jacob, William, George, Joseph, Sallie (married to John Serfass), Elizabeth (married to John Pouser), Susan (married to Peter Kunkel) and Hannah (married to Reuben Gregory). Jacob married Sallie Gregory, and had five children, viz.: Nathan, Reuben, Katie, Hannah (married to Charles Shafer) and Mary (who died at an early age). He is the oldest man now living in the township, having been born in 1804.

His parents both lived to the age of eighty-eight years. He was postmaster of the Long Valley post-office from its establishment till 1864, when it was removed to Gilbert's. He kept a licensed house twenty-eight years, and was one of Polk's best landlords. William married Sallie Storm, and was the father of nine children, viz.: Andrew, Berlin, Hannah (married to Charles Serfass), Elizabeth (married to Joseph Frantz), Caroline (married to Peter Frantz), Katie (married to Cornelius Smith), Sarah (married to Cornelius Seigenfus), Susan (married to Aaron Sult) and Mary (married to Reuben Berger). George took for his wife Sallie Kunkle, and had seven children, viz.: Paul, Freeman, Monroe, Mahlon, Katie (married to George Anglemoyer), Christianna (married to Reuben Frable) and Sallie (married to Nathan Hawk). Joseph was the husband of Lucinda Andrew, by whom he had ten children, viz.: William (undertaker at Brodheadsville), Nathan, Franklin, Charles, Maria (married to William Serfass), Hannah (married to John Nisson), Elizabeth (married to Joseph Shmale), Amanda (married to Charles Serfass), Catharine and Emma (who are still single).

The toils and hardships of all these first settlers were almost incredible. Their first dwellings were hastily built, and of the simplest architecture. Ofttimes they were compelled to encamp under trees and use bread made of flour mingled with water and baked on the coals. There were times in the experience of many when a supply of even this fare would have been deemed a luxury. One of the first articles manufactured by these hardy pioneers was "pine tar," extracted from the knots of decayed pine-trees. The product thus obtained was put in kegs, taken to Easton, and there exchanged for flour and other necessaries.

As a rule, they were not only men of great courage and endurance, but of sterling integrity. Their wives were also equally patterns of excellence. The old saying, "His word is as good as his bond," was really true with these people. For a stranger to settle among them was a rare occurrence. Those having possession of the soil conveyed it from one heir to another and thus kept the land among their descendants As nearly all the inhabitants were related, it was often difficult to select in the neighborhood the required number of suitable persons to serve as pall-bearers at many of the funerals.

The first settlers of this township were poor, and on account of their poor condition, it became necessary for many of them to apprentice or indenture certain of their children to their more fortunate friends or neighbors. As it may be of interest, a copy of such indenture is here inserted which is as follows:

"This Indenture, made the 11th day of May, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-one, witnesseth that Jeremiah Brown and Elizabeth, his wife, doth put and bind their daughter, Mary Brown, an apprentice unto Joseph Large, housbandman, and Elizabeth his wife, their heirs and assigns, to be taught to read intelligible in the english Bible, and to write so well as to keep her own accounts, and to be instructed to nitt, spinn and sew and other Housewifery reasonably well as an apprentice ought to do, and with them as an apprentice To Dwell, Continue and serve from the Day of Date hereof unto the full end and Term of nine years and three weeks, which will be on the sixth day of June in the year of our Lord, one Thousand seven hundred and eighty; During all which Term the said apprentice, her said master and mistress well and faithfully shall serve; their secrets keep, their lawful commands gladly Do; hurt to her so Master and Mistress she shall not Do, nor wilfully suffer to be done by others. But of the same to her Power shall forthwith give Notice to her said Master or Mistress. The goods of her said Master nor Mistress she shall not Imbazle or waste, nor them lend without their consent to any. At Cards, Dice or any other unlawful Game she shall not play. Taverns or Ale houses she shall not frequent, fornication she shall not commit, matrimony she shall not contract. From the service of her said Master or Mistress she shall not at any time depart or absent herself without her said Master and Mistresses leave. But in all Things as a good and faithful apprentice shall and will Demean and behave herself towards her said Master and Mistress and all theirs. During the said term, and the said Master and Mistress their said apprentice shall and will teach and instruct or cause to be taught and instructed in all things above mentioned, and shall and will also find and allow unto their said apprentice Meat, Drink, washing, lodging and apparel, linen as well as woolen and other necessaries fit and convenient for such Apprentice During the said term and at her End of the said term shall Give to their said apprentice Two suits of apparel, one of which shall Be New. In witness whereof the Parties have hereunto set their hands and seals interchangable the day and year above written.

Schools.—The first school-house in the township was built at Kresgeville, fifty or sixty years ago. The land upon which it stood was donated for that purpose by Nicholas Hawk. John S. Fisher, now cashier of the Stroudsburg Bank, was the third teacher in this house. As late as 1860 the teachers taught but reading, writing and spelling, with the rudiments of arithmetic. Inferior as these schools were, when measured by the present standard, they were sufficient for the necessities of the times.

The township is at present divided into eight school districts. Nos. 2, 3 and 8 comprise the upper half of the township. The whole number of pupils is three hundred and thirty. The total receipts for the year ending June 4, 1885, were $1252.42 and the total expenditures $1215.44.

The following is a list of the school directors of the township since the erection of same:

Churches.—An Evangelical Church, called St. Timothy, is the only church in the township. It is situated in Dorshimer School District and was built in 1866, at a cost of about one thousand dollars. The first sermon in this house was preached by Rev. L. N. Worman, who was the first regular minister for the congregation.

Justices of the Peace.—The justices of the peace since the organization of the township have been as follows :

1850. Philip Kresge.	1873. Jacob Learn.

1864. Joseph Gruber.	1883. Stephen Zeigenfus.
1869. Joseph Gruber.	1884. James M. Berlin.

Roads.—The State road, running through Long Valley to Mauch Chunk, is the oldest road in the township. The road leading from Gilbert's to Kresgeville was opened nearly one hundred years ago and was at one time an Indian trail.

Villages, Hotels and Stores.—Kresgeville is the largest village in the township. It is situated on the Big Creek, one mile east from the Carbon County line. In 1855 Edward Hawk discovered slate near the Carbon line, on Big Creek, and opened a quarry. The slate was extensively manufactured into school-slates, of which it is said to have made a superior quality, though it was not durable enough for roofing-slate. About 1864 Henry McClellan, of the city of Brooklyn, started a tannery in this village and ran the same till 1873, when he made a deed of assignment to Francis A. Gale in trust for the benefit of his creditors.

The Kresgeville post-office was established about 1845, with Philip Kresge as postmaster. The village at present contains three stores, two hotels, two grist-mills, four blacksmith shops, furniture store, saddler shop, shoemaker shop.

New Mechanicsville is located at the foot of the Pocono Mountains, on the road leading from Kresgeville to White Haven. The first settlement at this place was made by Beddy & Strow, who erected a saw-mill and engaged in lumbering. Henry Everitt was proprietor of the first hotel, which is now owned and kept by James Snyder.

Washington Store is situated on Washington Run, one mile south of Kresgeville. Merchant, Moritz Meitner.

Dottersville is a small cluster of houses two miles north from Kresgeville. It was named after Jacob Dotter, who started a hotel there in 1838.

CHAPTER XVIII.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

The territory comprising this township was originally a part of Pocono township, and so remained until 1843, when the court appointed Peter S. Shaw, Stogdell S. Stokes and John Huston commissioners to run a dividing line, and on September 12, 1843, they reported the following division: "Beginning at a stone on the Hamilton township line, one hundred and eighteen perches west of the Pocono Bridge, near Jeremy Mackey's, and running thence north forty-five degrees west seven miles and one hundred and twenty-two perches to a stone in the Tobyhanna township line west of White Oak Run. We are also of the opinion that a new township is necessary for the accommodation of the citizens residing within the bounds of the said district, and accordingly set off that part of Pocono township southwest of the above mentioned line as a new township, to be called Jackson township." The report was confirmed December 13, 1843.

It is bounded on the north by Pocono, on the south by Hamilton and Chestnuthill, on the west by Tunkhannock and Chestnuthill and on the east by Hamilton township. McMichael Creek and the west branch of McMichael's rise in the northern part of the township, at the base of the Pocono Mountain, flow a southerly course through the township, thence through Chestnuthill, Hamilton and Stroud townships, and enter Brodhead Creek at Stroudsburg. The surface of the township is diversified, some portions hilly and undulating. The soil is of a sandy gravel, and, consequently, barren. A large amount of timber still exists.

Early Settlers.—The earliest permanent settlers within the limits of Jackson township, undoubtedly, were the Miller family. Frederick Miller was a native of Northampton, who emigrated to Hamilton township, subsequently moving into Jackson, and purchased, some time prior to 1765, a tract of land containing four hundred acres. He had several children, and among them was Jacob. It appears the property was divided at his death, Jacob remaining on the homestead property. He married Hannah Moyer, and had six children,—John, George and Henry, Hannah, Mary and Catharine. At his death John purchased the farm, and it is now in the possession of his son, Michael Miller.

John Rossinger settled in Jackson from Bucks County in 1811, and purchased three hundred and fifty acres of land. He was a man of some education and a tinsmith by trade; he taught the first school in Jackson township, (then Pocono.) He married Elizabeth Handeline, and had three sons and three daughters—Susanna (Mrs. Abraham Smith), Mary (Mrs. Daniel Belles), Catharine (Mrs. Abraham Tucker), Joseph, John and Reuben. Joseph was born February 1, 1802, and died at the age of seventy-five years, and had four sons and four daughters.

Among the enterprising early settlers of Jackson township was Peter Woodling, who is still living, being now in his eighty-seventh year. He moved from Hamilton township in 1823, and purchased, from Peter Brong and Jacob Miller, a farm containing two hundred and fifty-two acres. His father, George Woodling, emigrated from Germany some time in 1700, and settled in Hamilton. Peter married Mary Hoffner, and had children —Simon, William, Peter, Michael (who married a daughter of Jacob Kresge, and is postmaster and merchant at Reeder's), Amos, Theodore, Anna, Sarah (Mrs. William Setzer), Hannah (Mrs. James Warner), Susanna (Mrs. Aaron G. Handelong, of Bangor) and Mary.

The first Doll to settle in Jackson was Jacob, who was born in Montgomery County about 1781, and came to Jackson in 1806 and purchased ninety-six acres of land. He married, in 1804, Catharine Rustin, and died in 1858, leaving thirteen children, one having died in infancy—John, Jacob, Frederick, Samuel, George P., Christian, Joseph, Charles, Louisa (Mrs. James Evans), Mary (Mrs. Louis Bond), Sally (Mrs. Joseph Slutter), Elizabeth (Mrs. Wm. Bower), Hannah (Mrs. Charles Slutter).

Benjamin Van Horn, who was born in Berks County, came to Jackson in 1812. He purchased four hundred acres, built himself a log cabin, erected a saw-mill and was for many years engaged in the lumber business. The mill was situated about three miles from Jackson Corners. He married Nancy Young, of Hamilton, and had eight children—Rachel, John, Nicholas, Benjamin, Polly, Katy, Betsey and David. In 1818 his wife died, and he then married Mrs. Rachel Dailey and had three children—Elizabeth, Phebe and Samuel.

Christian Singer settled in Jackson prior to 1820. He was born in Montgomery County, Pa., and was connected with the Woodling farms. He married Susanna Woodling, of Hamilton, and bought two tracts of land containing three hundred acres, some of which is in possession of his children at present. He had four sons—Peter, Jacob, John and Samuel; his daughters were Susanna and Hannah. He married, for his second wife, Rachel Van Horn, and had six children—Christian, Amos, Theodosia, Eunice, Mary and Elizabeth. Jacob and Peter are living in the township upon portions of the farm, and are both within a few years of eighty.

Charles Hay came from Northampton in 1818 and bought a farm of one hundred and fourteen acres, which was located between Jackson Corners and Singerville; his wife was Anna Maria Torrone, and had eight children—Samuel, Catherine, Philip, Elizabeth, Melchior, John, Charles, Hiram. Philip is still living in the township.

John Woolbert was a native of Delaware, whose ancestors were Hollanders. In 1790 he came to Jackson and bought five hundred acres of land, situated in the vicinity of what is now Jackson Corners. He married Mary Weisner, of Hamilton, and had Sally (who married John Young, of Hamilton), Mathew, Louisa (who married George Neyhart, of Hamilton), Peggy (who married George Werkheiser, of Hamilton), John, Simon, Charles, Joseph, Catherine and George.

Joseph Rinker, a grandson of Abraham Rinker, who kept a tavern in the vicinity of Philadelphia at the close of the Revolutionary War, came to Jackson in 1827 and leased the mill property of Martin Schleicher, and two years afterwards purchased it and the farm, which contained about ninety-four acres, and was engaged for fifty-two years in the lumber business. He was married, in 1826, to Catherine Bellos. His children were Mary Ann (who married Abram Huffsmith), William, Lewis, Elizabeth (who married George Bartholomew), Hester Ann (who married Adam Slutter), Rosanna (who married Jerome Heller), Caleb, Lydia (married David Bright), James W., Rev. Joseph (who married Rosie Krotzer, and now resides at the Schuylkill House). Joseph, Sr., is in his eighty-fifth year; resides with his son William in Jackson township.

Among the settlers in the township of a later date was Jacob Kresge, who purchased a farm and has since resided in the township. He had children—Joseph, Israel, Maria, Levi, Richard, Jacob, Mary and Emeline. He is still living and resides with his son-in-law, Michael Woodling, who keeps the store and post-office at Reeder and is eighty-four years of age.

First Store.—The first store in Jackson was kept at Jackson Corners by John Osterhock, who came from New York State. After keeping it for a few years he sold it and left Jackson, and it has had several owners; at present it is kept by Jere Kresge. It was here the first post-office was established in the township, which was in 1861, with W. H. Rinehart as postmaster, who served until 1880, when Francis H. Miller was appointed; in 1881, J. H. Rhinehart was appointed and held office until 1884. Jere Kresge was then appointed and resigned in 1884 in favor of James Fable, having been elected justice of the peace.

First Saw-Mill.—The first mill was erected prior to 1765 by Frederick Miller, and was located on the west branch of McMichael Creek, on the road now leading from Tannersville to the Wind Gap. An incident connected with the building of the mill will show the capacity of those sturdy old Dutchmen who lived in the early days. The site selected for the mill necessitated the building of a race-way fifteen hundred feet long, and was at the base of the mountain, and had to be dug in bed rock. It is presumed that labor was hard to obtain, and Miller arranged with his neighbors and got up a bee, agreeing to furnish the necessary liquid refreshments, etc., when completed. It is said that eight barrels of whiskey were consumed by those engaged in building the race. In 1815 the mill was destroyed by fire, and rebuilt in 1822 by Martin Schleicher. It subsequently passed into the hands of Joseph Rinker, who operated it for fifty-two years, and in that time it was rebuilt several times, and is now operated by Samuel Rymel. In 1815 Frederick Miller, Jr., and Jesse Packer built a saw-mill on the same stream, at Jackson Corners, which was removed some years ago. John Walbert, in 1830, built a mill on a small stream called Stoney Creek, which is located on the road leading from Bartonsville to Jackson Corners, and is now in possession of Mr. McCluskey.

First Grist-Mill.—Michael Butz built the first and only grist-mill in the township in 1838, and after his death, which occurred in 1858, it passed into the hands of William Heckman, Stephen Singer, Jacob Bossard, and is now owned by John Carmer. It is situated on the road from Kennersville to Tannersville.

St. Mark's Church, of the Union Lutheran and Reformed Congregation, is located at Jackson Corners. Early in 1800 the first preaching was in the old school-house, which was destroyed by fire about 1884, and they had for their first pastor Rev. Joseph B. Gross, who was succeeded by Rev. Peter Ruppert, both resident pastors for the mother-church at Hamilton. In 1851 Peter Woodling donated the land, the new church was built, and the congregation has been in charge of the following pastors: Rev. George Heilig, Rev. A. Rumpff, Rev. S. S. Kline, Rev. Henry Seifert, Rev. J. R. Foucht, Rev. George Roths and Rev. R. H. Clare. The present number of Lutheran communicants is fifty-two.

Methodist Church (Dugan Chapel).—This church is located at Singersville, and was built in 1885, the first organized meetings being held in the school-house, with the Rev. F. M. Brady as pastor. The church was dedicated December 14, 1885, and has for its present pastor Rev. H. J. Illick.

Jackson Methodist Episcopal Church.—For some years previous to the building of the church preaching services were held in the barns of the neighborhood and the school-house. Revs. Heebner, Gould and others traveled this circuit in Jackson township prior to the building of the church. The Jackson Methodist Episcopal Church was built in 1833. Wm. Young was the preacher, assisted by Michael Misner, local preacher, and also William Bellis and Joseph Rinker. Since the building of the church the following preachers have occupied the pulpit: M. H. Sisty, R. Owens, J. Jones, G. Cummins, S. Reisner and others. The church met with great prosperity, and for many years had a very large membership.

The old stone church was torn down in 1872 and a more commodious building was erected at Neola, a village near by. This building is frame, cost about two thousand five hundred dollars, and will seat five hundred people. It was built during the pastorate of Rev. F. M. Brady. Barnet Kresge, Andrew Detrick, David Green, Isaac Tecter and Charles F. Honser were the trustees and building committee. This new church has been served by the following pastors: Amos Johnson, J. Richards, L. M. Hobbs, J. Bickerton, F. H. Gilbert, H. Frankland and Joseph H. Smith. During the present pastorate a large debt has been canceled, which had burdened the society for many years. The church is also undergoing very extensive repairs, which will add much to its success and prosperity. Its membership now numbers forty. The trustees at present are Silas Barnes, Isaiah Rinker, John Bellis, George W. Green and Harry Hobbs. The present pastor is Rev. W. Sheppard.

Schools.—The first school-house built within the limits of Jackson township was at what is now Reeder's, about the year 1811. Little is known in reference to it, further than that it was known as the Middle Borough School District. The lot was purchased by the citizens, and a log school-house erected. John Possinger was teacher, who had a short time before settled in what was then Pocono township. In 1827 a school-house was built at Jackson Corners, the ground being given by Peter Woodling, and the money raised by subscription, to provide for the erection of the building. The house was to be used for school and church purposes. Frederick Miller and John Woolbert being the largest subscribers, and having given fifty dollars apiece, were appointed building masters, and until 1851 it was the only place of worship in the township. The first teacher was George Anglemyer, and he was followed by James Harvey, John Setzer, John Hillard and Miss Hannah Setzer. The town is now divided into four school districts, with four male and two female teachers. The number of scholars is two hundred and twenty-nine. The total amount of tax for school and building purposes is $1055.29; State appropriation, $157.19; total expenditures for school purposes, $1346.97.

CHAPTER XIX.

POCONO TOWNSHIP.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION.—Pocono township is bounded on the north by Tunkhannock and Tobyhanna townships, east by Coolbaugh and Paradise townships, south by Stroud township and west by Jackson township. It takes its name from the mountain which extends across it.

It was erected a separate township by a decree of the courts of Northampton County, in November, 1816. Much of the land in this township was formerly classed among unseated lands, which induced the treasurer of the county in 1844 to offer for sale twelve thousand acres to pay the arrears of taxes due upon it. In 1830 the population was five hundred and sixty-four, in 1840 nine hundred and seventy-three, and the last census returns a total of twelve hundred and eight. The valuation of real and personal property in 1844 was seventy thousand one hundred and ninety-six dollars. The northern section was formerly a vast wilderness, with little uncleared or productive land, but modern enterprise has done much to improve and even beautify portions of it, though as an agricultural region it will never take high rank among the townships of the county.

NATURAL FEATURES.—The surface of the township is varied, being in some parts hilly and mountainous. The Pocono Mountain extends into the township on the west, terminating in what is known as the "Knob."

In the northwest is a range of mountains known also as the "Pocono Range." The soil is principally of a gravelly nature, some localities being so stony as to preclude abundant crops. Clay abounds in other parts, and much fertile land is found along the Pocono Creek and other streams. Wheat, rye, buckwheat, corn and hay are the staple products, while most fruits, especially apples, grow luxuriantly.

The township is amply watered by numerous streams. Pocono Creek is composed of two branches, one of which, the White Oak Run, rises in Tunkhannock and flows southeast into Pocono, where it joins the Straight Branch. It then flows southwest through Tannersville and Bartonsville, and thus on to Stroudsburg, where it joins the McMichael Creek. It affords power for two mills at Tannersville, one at Bartonsville, one on the Straight Branch, one on the White Oak Run, and supplies the Tanite Company's Works in Stroud township. Cranberry Creek rises in the northwest corner of the township, flows south and southwest and empties into the Pocono below Tannersville.

The Butz Run rises east of Tannersville, flows east and empties into the west branch of Brodhead Creek. The latter rises in Tobyhanna township, and flowing east through the northern part of the township, empties into Brodhead Creek, near Henryville. Brundage Creek rises in the western part of the township, and empties into the Pocono, near Tannersville.

SCHOOLS.—The township was not well supplied with schools at an early day. The first school was opened at Tannersville in a log school-house, which stood near the hotel kept by Henry Edinger, of which Charles Brown is the present landlord. The teacher who first presided over this school was Rachel Morgan.

At a later date a school was opened on the property now a part of the Stephen Kistler estate, and a school-master named Ritchie, whose family removed from Philadelphia to the county, assumed charge of the children of the neighborhood. A teacher named John Barton was also engaged, and followed his profession for several terms. The Tannersville school being the only one of consequence, scholars came from all parts of the township, and rendered this the most frequented place of learning within its limits, until the introduction of the free-school system. In 1836 a schoolhouse was built near Bartonsville, the first teacher being Daniel Shafer.

The same year a new and more commodious building was erected at Tannersville, and the township being divided into districts, the erection of school buildings followed in other portions of the township. These were simple in construction, but have since been removed to make way for more commodious structures. In 1879 a graded school was established at Tannersville, which is under the charge of M. S. Warner and Horace Keeler. The school territory of the township is now divided into eight districts, over which four male and four female teachers preside. There are two hundred and seventy-one scholars on the roll, the average attendance being two hundred. The State appropriation for school purposes is $202.75, and the amount of tax for the same object $777.63.

Early Roads.—The earliest road, so far as can be determined, is the highway known as the North and South road, which started from Saylorsburg, in Hamilton township, and pursued a northerly course to Bartonsville, where it diverged to the northwest, through Tobyhanna and Coolbaugh, and from thence north to Belmont. It was organized, at a later date, as the North and South turnpike, for which the company obtained a charter, and thus maintained until 1850, when the charter was relinquished, and it has since been one of the township roads. A resurvey was made under the act of incorporation, the road shortened and made much more direct. General Sullivan doubtless followed this road from Bartonsville through Pocono into Tobyhanna, where, at a point known as Hungry Hill, his army took a course bearing to the left.

A road surveyed at an early date begins at Fennersville (now Sciota), and running through Jackson township northeast to Tannersville, terminates in Middle Smithfield township. Another early road ran from Tannersville through Jackson to Phillipsburg, and on to Merwinsburg, in Chestnuthill township.

Early Burial-Places.—The earliest interment occurred in a burial-ground on the Stauffer property, near Cold Spring, and occupied by Charles Brown, and then in possession of the Learn family. Many members of the Learn family are buried here. In 1833 ground was cleared for a cemetery adjacent to the Lutheran Church at Tannersville. Among those who assisted in improving this plot was Henry Edinger, who is accredited with having felled the first tree. While at work he indulged in some speculations regarding the first burial in the inclosure. Very soon after he found a last resting-place within its boundaries which he had been the first to improve. This was the earliest interment in the Lutheran Cemetery. Other families who bury here are the Learns, Anglemoyers, Gentzhorns, Warners, Heckmans, Shicks, Transues, Woodlings, Smiths and Barrys. A cemetery connected with the Tannersville Methodist Episcopal Church was laid out twenty-five or more years ago and is used principally by the congregation of the church.

A cemetery connected with the Cherry Lane Methodist Episcopal Church was in use long before the organization of the church. The Bisbings, Greggs, Sebrings and neighboring families bury here. A burial-ground located at Knightsville, inclosed with a substantial wall, and now but little frequented, was formerly used by the Arnolds, Transues, Slutters and other families.

VILLAGES AND HAMLETS.

Tannersville.—About the year 1750 John Larner, formerly of Philadelphia, purchased the land now embraced in the village of Tannersville. He found it a vast wilderness, but with the aid of his sons soon effected a clearing and erected for his family a comfortable abode. He proceeded to the cultivation of the land and obtained abundant crops as the reward of his labor. His children settled around him and devoted their energies to farming pursuits. There was no special interest attached to this spot until 1830, when a man named Ritchie, from Philadelphia, opened a store for the sale of general merchandise adapted to a country trade, and was eventually succeeded by a merchant named Myers. The Larner family had some years before built a saw-mill, and Henry Edinger, in 1825, erected a grist-mill. In 1845 Jacob Stauffer opened a store on the property now occupied by Charles Brown, and a blacksmith shop was well patronized by the farmers in the vicinity. The place, with the exception of a number of dwellings erected within the last quarter of a century, has made little progress. There are now two grist-mills, run by Charles Brown and Milo Kistler; three stores, kept by Peter Warner & Co., Charles Brown and George Lessig; two blacksmith shops, by Daniel and Elon Williams; a public hall, two churches and a graded school. A secret order, known as the Mystic Band of Brothers, was maintained for many years, but has since become extinct. Two hotels are located here, the respective landlords being Charles Brown and Manasseh Miller. About 1834 Jacob Singmaster established a tannery, which was conducted by him for several years, and finally disposed of to Messrs. Downing & Co., of Philadelphia. It became a second time the property of Mr. Singmaster; was later purchased by Stephen Kistler, and conducted by him or his heirs until its destruction by fire, in 1884. Soon after the erection of the tannery a post-office was established, and has since been maintained, with Elmer Warner as the present postmaster. With the burning of the tannery much of the interest and enterprise attaching to this place ceased.

Bartonsville, a hamlet lying in the southern corner of the township, was laid out by Joseph Barton about the year 1833. He erected a hotel and store, being for many years both landlord and merchant at this point. The store, which is at present kept by Nelson Dietrick, was built about 1850. There is also a grist-mill, owned by Peter Slutter and operated by William H. Resh. The village blacksmith is Samuel Musselman, and the postmaster Stephen M. Kistler. A tannery, built by Mr. Kistler in 1867, was in operation until 1871, the number of hides used per week being one hundred and fifty.

Knipesville.—More than forty years ago Messrs. Downing & Co. established a tannery and store at this point, and managed both successfully until a scarcity of timber compelled an abandonment of the tanning interests. Another store was opened and kept by the Storm family for several years, its present proprietors being Heckman Brothers. A wheelwright shop is carried on by Geo. S. Knipe, from whom the place takes its name, and Augustus Ehlers built and controls a saw and shingle-mill. W. C. Transue at present presides over the schools at this point.

Stanhope Post-Office.—There is a post-office known as Stanhope in the northwest portion of the township, the postmaster being Joel Burritt. This point is more generally known through "Swiftwater," a summer resort kept by Arthur McGinnis. A store for the sale of general merchandise is also located here.

Early Settlements.—The earliest settlement in Pocono was undoubtedly made by the Larner (now Learn) family, John Larner having come with his family from Philadelphia, about 1750, and settled at the spot now known as Tannersville, where he purchased a large tract of land. Among his children were sons Jacob, John, George, Peter, Andrew and several daughters. Jacob settled on the farm now owned by Jacob Learn, and from thence removed to land in Hamilton township. He married a Miss Roming, whose children were Peter, George, Andrew, John, Samuel, of whom Peter owned and resided upon the farm now the home of his son, Squire Jacob Learn. He married Margaret Ann, daughter of Christian Starner, and had children—Amos, Jacob, Morris, Sallie (Mrs. David Edinger) and one who died in early life. The only representative of the family now in the township is Squire Jacob Learn, who married Mary Werkheiser. Their children are two sons, Peter and Henry, and daughters, Catherine and Margaret Ann. John Learn removed with his family to New York State about 1821, Peter made Canada his home and Andrew located near Pittsburgh, Pa. George, his wife and child were massacred by the Indians, as is elsewhere related.

Henry Anglemoyer intermarried with the March family. His children were John, Peter, Adam and Jacob, all of whom, with the exception of Peter, remained in the township. Adam has two sons, Aaron and Peter, residing in Pocono, and Morris, a son of John, is also settled in the township.

Melchior Smith, who located northeast from Tannersville, married Sarah Anthony, whose children were John, George, Jacob, Abram, Joseph, Peter, Catherine (Mrs. Bush), Sarah (Mrs. Shiffer), Elizabeth (Mrs. Warner), Magdalene (Mrs. Halstead) and Julia Ann (Mrs. Bisbee). George resides in Paradise township, as does also Mrs. Bush, and Peter, with his sister, Mrs. Bisbee, have removed to the State of Michigan. The remainder of the family are still in the township.

George Belles, an early resident of the township, married Mary De Haven, and had children—Abram, Jacob, William, Adam, John, Levi and Linford. Levi married Margaret Ellet, and had children—Adam E., Maryetta and Emma, of whom Adam and the last-mentioned daughter reside in Pocono.

Henry Edinger removed from Stroudsburg in 1823, and purchased the farm formerly owned by John Learn and now occupied by Charles Brown. He married Eve Sleight, of Northampton County, and had children—John, Henry, Jacob, Abram, David, Peter S., Adam, Sallie, Elizabeth, Magdalen, Catherine and Mary Ann. Of this number, Peter S., David, Abraham, Elizabeth (Mrs. Shick) and Catherine (Mrs. Shiveley) settled in the township. Abram, who is deceased, subsequently removed from Pocono, and David now resides in Bradford County.

John Shick removed from Northampton County about the year 1806, and followed his trade of millwright in Pocono. He married Julia Marsh, whose children are Jacob, Samuel, John, Lydia (Mrs. John Merwein), Charles, Sarah (Mrs. Michael Kresge) and Peter. Samuel married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Edinger, and has children—Henry, Amos, Frank, George, Stogdell, David, Stewart, Milton, Lydia, Mary, Caroline and Sarah. Peter married Elizabeth Transue and has one son, Timothy.

Joseph Heckman, who served in the Revolutionary War, came from Hamilton township to Pocono, having formerly resided in Northampton County. One John Linn, an eccentric character, built a saw-mill on the Pocono Creek, which he ran for some years, and becoming weary of his monotonous round of labor, sold and removed to Tunkhannock, where he was found in a shanty, which he had erected, with life extinct. Joseph Heckman bought the saw-mill and operated it successfully. His children were Joseph, George, William, Josiah, Maggie and Susannah. William and Maggie still reside in the township, as do also the sons of the second Joseph.

Martin Sliker resided in Paradise. His children were George, John and Barbara. George moved to Pocono nearly half a century since, where he rented a farm and later purchased the property which is his present home, at that time almost entirely an uncleared tract. He married Betsey Bender, whose children are Peter W., Andrew, William, Mary Ann and Margaret.

Abram Transue came to the township in 1831 from Middle Smithfield and purchased a farm in Sullivan Valley, embracing three hundred and twenty acres. He married Margaret Newhart, whose children are Elizabeth, William, Sarah, Rachel, Peter, George, Elihu, Moses, Anna and Abraham. Three of this number are deceased. The remaining members of the family, with the exception of Rachel, reside in the township. William married Ann Anglemoyer and has four children. George married Sophia Ruth and has eleven children. Moses, who resides on the homestead, married Emeline Hoke and has seven children. Peter married, first, Leah Arnold and, a second time, Elizabeth Brown. He has eight children.

Thomas Miller, who resided in Hamilton township, married Catherine La Bar, whose children were eight sons and five daughters. But one of these, Manasseh, a popular landlord in Tannersville for nearly forty years, resides in the township. He married Harriet Burritt, of the same township, and has six sons and six daughters, of whom Gideon B., Simon B., Joel B., Morris B. and four daughters reside in Pocono.

John Bisbing came from Marshall Creek, in Stroudsburg township, about 1820 and settled upon a farm now the property of 'Squire Learn, from which he at a late date removed to land located above Tannersville. His children are Jacob, Joseph, William, George, Eve, Lucinda, Nancy and —— (Mrs. Packer). All of this number are either deceased or have removed from the township.

John Prutzman removed from Hamilton to Pocono township and settled on a farm below Tannersville. By his marriage to a Miss Myers he had children—Lewis, Jacob, Rachel, Betsy, Maria and Susan. But one of these, Susan (Mrs. Burdenstock), now resides in the township with her brother-in-law, John Butz, of Tannersville.

Arthur Henry resided on Butz Run, on a farm now owed by his grandson, John Henry. His children were Jacob, James, Charles, William and several daughters. James and William are residents of Paradise township.

Peter Butz owned a farm near the hamlet of Fennersville, in Hamilton township. His children were Christian, Jacob, John, Michael, Peter, George and two daughters, Mary and Lydia. George still resides on the homestead. Christian removed to New York State, where he enjoys excellent health in his ninety-third year. Jacob, having purchased a farm in Hamilton, married Christy Ann, daughter of John Arnold, of that township, and had children,—Michael, Henry, Abram, Isaac, John and two daughters, Mary (Mrs. Hilsman) and Hannah (Mrs. Samuel Miller). John Butz was born in Hamilton township in 1812, and in 1834 removed to Pocono, where he followed the trade of a carpenter. He later embarked in mercantile pursuits, and managed a tannery, but ultimately retired to the farm he now owns at Tannersville. He married, in 1837, Rachel Prutzman, of Pocono, and has children,—George, Jacob and Jane (Mrs. Samuel Shively).

George Warner removed from Moore township, Northampton County, to Ross township, Monroe County. By his union with a Miss Rummidge were several children, among whom was George, a soldier of the War of 1812, for which service he drew a pension of one hundred and sixty acres of land. He removed to Pocono in 1816, and located on the west side of Pocono Creek, near Tannersville. He married Elizabeth Anglemoyer, and had children,—Charles, Jacob, Levi, Andrew, Samuel, Peter, William, Lydia (Mrs. Casper Metzgar), Mary (Mrs. Jonathan Knous) and Sarah (Mrs. George W. Merwein). But two of this number, Peter and Samuel, now reside in the township.

John Sebring resided in Pocono, on a farm now owned by Depue Bush. He had children,—John, Anthony, George, Mary (Mrs. John Brink), Rebecca (Mrs. William Belles). Anthony Sebring married Mary Bush, and had children,—Thomas, Sarah and Lucetta, now living. John Sebring married, first, Eliza Bush, and, second, Susan Smith. His children are Harrison, William, Joshua, George and Margaret. George Sebring married a Miss Belles, whose children are David, Samuel, Abel, Susanna, Anne E. and others. There are now living in Pocono George and his son David, Thomas, the son of Anthony, and Joshua, the son of John.

Jacob Stauffer, though not an early settler, was one of the most enterprising residents of Tannersville, where he was extensively engaged in business. He removed from Northampton County to the township in 1845, and engaged in lumbering, store-keeping, farming, staging, etc. He married Anna Hahn, who still survives him, and resided in the above village until his death, in 1881. Their children are Isaac, George E., Catherine A. (Mrs. Charles Brown, of Tannersville) and Henrietta (Mrs. Wilson Kistler, of Lock Haven).

MASSACRE OF THE LARNER FAMILY.—The following facts relating to the massacre of members of the Larner family by Indians is contributed by one of the family: Before and during the period of the Revolution a boat-path led from Stroudsburg to Tannersville along the banks of the Pocono Creek. Some time after the settlement of the Larner family at the latter point, a settler, in following the path, discovered the tracks of Indians about two miles away and on reaching Tannersville at once informed the family of John Larner to enable them to guard against the sudden attack of the red men. The following day George Larner repaired to a field adjoining the house, where he was engaged in mowing, when a band of Indians approached, and placing themselves between their victim and the house, fired and wounded him. Securing a fence-rail, he then defended himself with great bravery, but was finally overpowered and killed while attempting to reach the house of his brother John. After scalping him they started for the house, and securing his wife and child, carried them to the Pocono Mountain. The settlers on learning the facts at once started in pursuit, and on reaching the mountain, to their horror discovered the body of the child, who had been scalped, lying not far from the mother, whom they butchered in the most inhuman fashion, portions of her body being suspended from the nearest tree. John Larner, the father, on hearing the firing, approached to learn its cause, and seeing an Indian, fired at him. This proved to him a fatal shot, as it revealed to the foe his presence and ensured his speedy death at their hands. It was supposed he succeeded in killing the Indian he fired at, as a cap with a buckshot hole through it was found on the spot, but the body had been carried away by his comrades. John Larner, Jr., the following day discovered an Indian skulking about the house and at once sped a bullet through his head. A chain was attached to his neck and the body drawn by a yoke of oxen to a mine-hole half a mile distant, where it was stamped down and left to moulder. This Indian had seven rifle-balls in his mouth, placed there to enable him to load his weapon with expedition. One writer states that John Larner, on seeing the Indian, concealed himself behind a stump, took off his hat, placed it on a stick and lifted it above his hiding-place. The red man, being easily deceived by this ruse, fired at the hat, when the shot was returned with fatal effect. This incident is not, however, authenticated.

CHURCHES.

ST. PAUL'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This church is located at Tannersville, the edifice having been erected in 1834, though it is probable the organization was effected some time before this date. The first regular pastor was Rev. Joseph Grouse, who ministered to the congregation during the years 1835 and 1836. He was, in turn, succeeded by the following clergymen: Rev. John Heilig, who remained ten years; Rev. Jacob Rumph, one year; Rev. S. S. Kline, Rev. Henry Seifert, Rev. Joseph Focht, four years. The deacons at this time were E. Williams and J. Shook; the elder, S. Kistler, and M. Kistler, trustee. Rev. Fritz was pastor for six months, during which period the church was very prosperous. He was succeeded by Rev. A. M. Strous, with S. Kistler as elder and J. Woodling and Henry Learn as trustees, who were followed by David Dauber, James Worner, Reuben Semmel, D. Reinhart and others, John Woodling being for a long period the elder. The present pastor is Rev. R. H. Clair; the elders, Philip Learn and Samuel Storm; the deacons, J. Motz and J. Warner; the trustee is David Dauber; superintendent of Sabbath-school, David Dauber; and sexton, Elon Williams.

St. Paul's Church, which was built and is sustained by the combined efforts of the Reformed and Lutheran denominations, has been spoken of in connection with the latter denomination. Rev. John P. Decker was called to the pastorate of the Reformed congregation in 1834, and remained thus settled until 1853, when he was succeeded by Rev. Charles Becker, who ministered to the flock until 1872. Rev. Daniel Shoedler accepted a call in that year and remained until 1875, when Rev. Thomas Huber filled the pulpit for two years. Rev. C. W. Seigle, who followed him, remained until 1880, and Rev. M. H. Mishler, his successor, until 1883. In that year Rev. F. W. Smith was settled over the congregation, and remained its pastor until 1885. The church has a communicant membership of one hundred and sixty-two.

METHODIST CHURCHES.—The first Methodist preaching done in this region was by the Rev. Mr. Heebner, and this took place in the district school-houses.

The first church in the township was built at Tannersville. It was begun in the year 1859. The lecture-room was completed this year. Rev. R. Owen, preacher in charge.

The board of trustees was composed of the following-named persons: Oris Sage, Jacob Edinger, John Neyhart, Benj. Hall and Henry Biebing. The building was completed during the pastorate of Thomas Kirkpatrick.

The pastors who successively served this church were J. C. Gregg, G. L. Shaffer, J. Pastorfield, L. B. Hoffman, E. L. Martin, D. F. Unangst, L. M. Hobbs, G. W. Dungan and the present incumbent, H. J. Illick, now spending his third year at this point.

The second church in this township was built at "Cherry Lane," in the year 1865. The trustees were John Sebring, R. N. Cramer and Henry Bisbing. This church was connected with Tannersville, and served by the same pastor. At the time this church was built Rev. J. C. Gregg was preacher in charge.

CHAPTER XX.

PRICE TOWNSHIP.[1]

PRICE TOWNSHIP was erected from Smithfield township in 1830, and was so named in honor of John Price, the first settler in the township. It was formerly much larger and included what are now Paradise and Barrett townships. It is bounded on the north by Barrett township, on the east by Pike County and Middle Smithfield township, on the south by Smithfield and Stroud townships, and on the west by Paradise township. It extends in length, north and south, about seven miles, and its greatest width is about five miles. The surface of the land is very uneven. A very small proportion of the land is cultivated. This is situated principally along Brodhead Creek. The other portion is slightly timbered or barren. The soil is partly of a sandy nature and partly loam.

About one hundred men are employed in quarrying flag-stones, a very good quality of which is found in this township.

The land is well drained by several streams, principal of which is Brodhead Creek, which enters the northern part and flows in a southerly direction through the western part of the township. Stony Run rises in the northern part and flows in a southwesterly direction and joins Brodhead Creek. Laurel Run flows in a westerly direction through the centre of the township. Pine Mountain Run flows in a westerly direction. Long Run flows in a southwest direction through the southern part of the township, and all empty into Brodhead Creek. All these are rapidly-flowing streams. The township is sparsely inhabited and does not contain a village, a post-office, a store or a hotel. The scenery is very romantic and picturesque. The population, as given by the census of 1880, is two hundred and fifty-two.

Early Settlements.—The valley along Brodhead Creek afforded the most inviting situations for settlements. Accordingly, most of the early inhabitants took up their abode there. Among the earliest families that came to this township were John Price, James Price, David and James Michner and Elihu Posten. They were all farmers and immediately made preparations for tilling the soil. The abundance of game and fish made it an easy task to supply the family with choice meat. By shaving hoop-poles and staves, and trading with the merchants, the other necessities of life, not to be obtained in this neighborhood, were procured.

The date of the arrival of these settlers, the names of their descendants and the present owners of the land on which these men settled will doubtless be of interest to some.

John Price came from Bucks County, and in 1764 settled on a tract of land, part of which is now in Price and part in Barrett township. He was the father of twelve children, viz.: Joseph, Ichabod, John, Benjamin, Samuel, Eleazar, Charles, Nancy, Huldah, Mary, Jane and Sarah. Joseph married Hannah Smiley, and after her decease, Katie Transue. He resided for some years in the township and then moved to Indiana, where he died. He had four children, viz.: Ichabod, John, George and Ann. Ichabod moved to Barrett, where he died. John was a resident of Paradise at the time of his death. George died in the West. Ann was the wife of John Houser, and lived in Stroud township at the time of her death. Ichabod was killed at Fort Meigs while serving in the War of 1812. John married Sarah Van Vliet, and resided in the township at the time of his death. He was the father of eight children, viz.: Samuel, John Jeremiah, Robert, Ann, Jane, Caroline and Sarah. Samuel (deceased) was a resident of Stroudsburg. John married Margaret Long, and resided in the township until his decease. He was the father of ten children, viz.: Eliza, Etna, William R., Lewis, Edward, Margaret, Mary, John, Henry C. and Commodore. Jeremiah and Robert deceased. Ann, wife of Jacob Hilgert, resided in Paradise township at the time of her death. Jane, wife of Charles Henry, resided in Paradise. Caroline, wife of Jeremiah Posten, died in the township. Sarah, wife of Daniel Long, resided in East Stroudsburg.

Benjamin married Jane Smith and lived in the township. He had nine children, namely, Jacob, Charles, Smith, Mary A., Daniel, Benjamin, Mahala, Emeline and Wilkinson. Jacob, Charles and Smith were residents of Barrett at the time of their deaths. Mary A., wife of William C. Long, lives in Barrett. Benjamin, Emeline and Mahala died unmarried, in the township. Wilkinson resides in Barrett. Samuel married Sarah Sees, and resides in the township. He was the father of five children, namely, Eliza, Jane, Mary, Rebecca and John S. Eliza married Jeremiah Price and after his decease she became the wife of Frederick Mickley and moved to Barrett, where she died. Jane married Samuel Price, and died in Barrett township. Mary and Rebecca died unmarried, in Barrett. John S. resides in Barrett. Eleazar married Rachael Drake, and resided in the township. He had eight children, namely, Maria, Huldah, Phila, Ann, Charles J., William, Perry and Joseph. Maria, wife of Jacob Henry, lives in Pocono township. Huldah married Nathan Chittister, and moved to Michigan, where she died. Phila, wife of Charles Price, lived in Barrett. Ann, wife of James Mays, died in Michigan. Charles J. lives in Barrett. William died in Michigan. Perry married Julia Ann Yetter and resided in the township. He was the father of eight children, namely, Ann, Huldah, Lewis, Emma, Amanda, Minnie, Morris and Susan. Joseph married Maria Yetter, resides in the township and has four children—Caroline, Rachel, Nathan and Margaret B. Charles died unmarried, in Michigan; Nancy, wife of James Price, died in Michigan; Huldah married Richard Shaw, and died in Michigan; Mary, died unmarried; Jane, wife of John Siddle, died in Pittsburgh; Sarah, wife of William Levis. The land in Price township, on which John Price settled, is now owned by the heirs of Perry Price.

James Price settled in Price township, about the year 1800, on a tract of land now owned by the widow of Samuel Price. He resided there twenty-five or thirty years, married Nancy Price and moved to Michigan with his entire family, where he spent the remainder of his life.

David and James Michner settled in Price township about 1815, and there resided for a few years and then went West. The land on which they settled is now owned by Gerhard Haase.

Elihu Posten married Eleanor Transue and settled in Price township in 1825. He was the father of nine children, namely, John, Jeremiah, Samuel, Mary A., Richard, Jane, Elizabeth, Mahala and Eleanor. John resides in Scranton. Jeremiah married Caroline Price and resides in the township. He has had three children—Sarah A, Eliza J. and Sylvester. Samuel married Margaret Yeisley and resided in the township until his death. Mary A., wife of Jonathan Schoonover, lived in Pike County. Richard died in Wisconsin. Jane died unmarried. Elizabeth, wife of A. J. Biesecker, resides in Wisconsin. Mahala, widow of Charles Stuard, lives in the township; and Eleanor, widow of Peter Albert, resides in Scranton. The land on which Elihu Posten settled is now owned by the heirs of Charles Stuard.

ROADS.—In the early history of this township the roads were few in number and in a very poor condition. The streams were unbridged, and it was necessary to cross them at fords. The oldest road located in the township was constructed more than a hundred years ago. This road, extending from Stroudsburg to New Foundland settlement, followed Brodhead Creek, and consequently ran through the western part of the township. This is still the main road in Price. Another road extended from this township to Paradise Valley, which has been repaired and is still in use. The roads in this township are now more numerous and in a much better condition, which is due to the diligence of the supervisors. The following is a list of persons who have been supervisors in Price since 1840:

Samuel Bradley also figured among the first teachers. At the present time there are three neat frame school-houses in the township. Fifty-seven pupils attend these schools and are instructed by two male and one female teachers, to whom the sum of one hundred and eighty dollars is paid. The school term is five months per annum.

TOWNSHIP OFFICERS.—In Price township, from 1840 to the present time, a large number of justices of the peace have been elected, many of whom failed to take their commission. The following is a list of those who have served:

1845. Jacob Hilgert.
1855. Jacob Price.
1865. Harrison Sebring.
1869. Samuel Posten.
1874. Samuel Posten.
1878. Thos. M. Lesher.
1881. Abel Cushing.

SAW-MILLS.—About seventy years ago John Price and Eleazar Price each built a saw-mill on Brodhead Creek. These mills have been destroyed, but on their sites new mills now stand, which are owned respectively by E. T. Long and the heirs of Perry Price. These are the only manufactories in the township.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

McComas Methodist Episcopal Church.[1]—Regular Methodist preaching services began to be held in the school-house near the old Price farm, or homestead, about the year 1856, by the Rev. Francis D. Eagan. As the result of these services, several persons were converted and a small society organized, which continued to meet in the school-house till the year 1866, when the Third Quarterly Conference of Monroe Circuit appointed a committee to inquire into the expediency of building a church. The committee, at the next Conference, reported in favor of the proposition, and a board of trustees was elected, consisting of Samuel Posten, Harrison Sebring, George W. Price, John B. Snow, Daniel Long and Edward F. Palen. During the summer of 1867, under the pastorate of Rev. N. D. McComas, a one-story frame church, twenty-four by thirty-four feet, was erected. The prospect of raising the necessary funds seemed very dark at first. The community was one of farmers, who were not able to contribute much in the shape of money. The ground, however, was given by Harrison Sebring, and most of the lumber by various individuals. A large part of the work, also, was contributed under the lead of Rev. McComas, who showed his zeal by his works, laboring with his own hands. At a critical juncture, when it seemed as if the work must stop for want of means, help was afforded by the firm of Palen & Northrop, of Canadensis, who, from first to last, took a deep interest in this enterprise. On the occasion referred to they came to the rescue with a contribution of one hundred and fifty dollars. The church being finished, there remained to be raised on the day of dedication about two hundred dollars, which amount was raised at the morning service without much difficulty. The furniture of the church was secured through the exertions of Mrs. Sarah Northrop, who raised a sufficient sum among her friends and purchased the articles needed. In view of the interest thus shown, it was determined to give her the naming of the church. She selected the name of "McComas Chapel," in honor of the energetic pastor under whose administration it was built.

The total cost of the church was eight hundred and fifty dollars. Soon after the dedication a revival occurred, resulting in the conversion of sixteen persons, increasing the membership to thirty-seven. Regular services have been held in the church from its dedication to the present time, by the following pastors: Revs. N. D. McComas, B. T. String, William P. Howell, T. W. Maclary, Jeremiah Pastorfield, J. D. Folsom, George Alcorn, Frederick Illman, Lewis M. Hobbs and George Mack. In the year 1877 Monroe Circuit was divided, when McComas Chapel became a part of Spragueville Circuit, on which circuit it still remains. Last year the church building was repaired and repainted at a cost of one hundred dollars, and is free of debt. The membership has never been very large, owing to the sparse population of the neighborhood. There are at present twenty-three members. A Sabbath-school is held in the church during the summer and fall months, numbering forty-three officers, teachers and scholars.

The present officials of the church are as follows: Pastor, George Mack; Stewards, Henry Lesoine, Margaret Posten; Trustees, Lewis Long, Zalmon Snow, Henry Lesoine, James Conklin, Thomas Long; Class-Leader, Henry Lesoine; Sunday-school Superintendent, Margaret Posten. A graveyard is connected with the church, in which a large number of those who have died in the neighborhood are buried.

CHAPTER XXI.

PARADISE TOWNSHIP.[2]

Paradise Township comprises what was formerly a portion of Price township. It is bounded on the north by Barrett township, on the east by Price, on the south by Pocono and on the west by Coolbaugh. Its extent in length, east and west, is about seven miles, and its width is about four miles.

[2] By Wilton A. Erdman.

The general structure of the township is very uneven, being composed of numerous hills, some of which, in the northern part, are called Pocono Mountains.

Two valleys, nearly parallel, and each about two miles in length and one-half a mile in width, lie in the centre. One of the valleys is watered by Long Swamp Creek, which rises in the northwestern part of the township and flows in a southeasterly direction. Timber Hill Creek waters the other valley. This stream rises in the west, flows in an easterly direction and joins Long Swamp Creek. Heller Creek rises in the southern part of the township, flows northeasterly and unites its waters with those of Long Swamp and Timber Hill Creeks a short distance below their junction. The confluence of these three streams forms the middle branch of Brodhead Creek, which branch flows easterly until joined by Cranberry Run, when a southeasterly course is taken. Cranberry Run flows down through the eastern portion of Paradise township and merges into the middle branch of Brodhead Creek. These streams render the soil fertile, and, abounding with trout, are a source of pleasure and profit to the fishermen.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passes in a northerly direction through the eastern portion of this township, and re-entering, winds in a southerly direction through the western part. This railroad affords large facilities for travel and shipments. The grade of the railroad in passing through Paradise township sometimes exceeds, but never is less than ninety feet to the mile.

Nearly one-half of the land of Paradise township is cultivated, the balance being either slightly wooded or barren. The two valleys comprise the most fertile parts and yield well. The soil is loamy and produces the usual fruits, grains and vegetables. Quarrying flag-stones afford employment in different places in Paradise to many men.

The scenery is varied and picturesque, and an abundance of fish and game attracts annually a large number of city people to this region.

The population, as given by the census of 1880, is six hundred and eighty-eight.

ORGANIZATION.—Paradise township was erected from Price in the fall of 1848. It originally contained more territory, comprising a part of what is now Barrett township. The cause and manner of its erection are recorded in the prothonotary's office at Stroudsburg, and are as follows:

"The petition of citizens of Price township, setting forth that they labour under great inconvenience and grievance in consequence of the great extent of Territory which is embraced in said Township, consisting of Twelve Miles square, or more, which causes great trouble and expense in attending to the public duties of said Township, and praying the court that a New Township shall be cut off of the western portion of said Township, to be called Paradise, by a line running from the corner of Stroud and Pocono Townships, where it intersects the said line of said Price Township, near Michael Ransberry's; thence to a point on the North line of said Price township, where it adjoins Pike County, passing between William Long's and Smith Price's in said Township. And praying the court to appoint proper persons to make division and lay out the said new Township of Paradise. Whereupon the Court, on the tenth day of April, 1847, appoint John Shively, Walter Barry, Jr., and Jonas Hanna Commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of the Petitioners and make Report of their proceedings, together with a plot or draft of the Township proposed to be laid off if the same cannot be fully designated. And now, July 14, 1847, the Commissioners make the following Report: To the Honorable Judges within named: we, the undersigned, the Commissioners in the within order named, according to previous notice, did meet on the 27th day of April, A.D. 1847, and after being duly sworn or affirmed according to law, proceeded to the performance of the duties within mentioned, and in pursuance thereof do report that we have Surveyed and Marked the line as follows: Beginning at the corner of Stroud and Pocono Townships, where they intersect Price Township; thence North twelve degrees West Nine Miles to the Falls of the Buckhill Branch of Brodhead Creek, where we put up a good Stone Corner; thence North seventy-eight degrees East Seven perches and six-tenths to the lower edge of the said Falls, where we put up a good Stone Corner; thence North Twelve degrees West, passing between William Long's and Smith Price's, three miles and a quarter to the Northern line of said Price Township, adjoining Pike County, where we put up a good Stone Corner into woods and marked it well. And we are of the Opinion that the division of Price Township is necessary, and have accordingly sett off that part of Price Township West of the above lines as a new township; a plot or draft is hereunto annexed. Witness our hands this eleventh day of May, A.D. 1847.

"JOHN SHIVELY,
"WALTER BARRY, JR.,
"JONAS HANNA.

"July 14, 1847, Confirmed Nisi by the Court and now, July 15, 1848, The Court refer this report to the Commissioners to straighten the line and Report to the next Court.

"And now, September 26, 1848, the Commissioners make the following Report: To the Honorable Judges in the annexed order named. We the undersigned, the Commissioners in the within order named, according to previous notice, did meet on the 13th day of September, A.D. 1848, and after being duly sworn according to law, proceeded to the performance of the duties therein mentioned, and in pursuance thereof Do Report that we have surveyed and marked the line as follows: Beginning at the Corner of Stroud and Pocono Townships, where they intersect Price Township, near Michael Ransberry's; thence North twelve degrees West twelve miles and a quarter to the northern boundary line of Price township, adjoining Pike County, where we put up a good stone Corner and marked it well. And we are of the opinion that the division of Price Township is actually necessary and have accordingly set off that part of Price Township West of the above line as a new Township. A plot or draft is hereunto annexed. Witness our hands this 26th day of September, 1848.

"WALTER BARRY, JR.
"JOHN SHIVELY.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.—The first settlements in Paradise township were made in the two valleys. These places were doubtless selected on account of the fertility of the soil. In the one valley Henry Everhart, Nicholas Bush, George Kleckler and John Learn settled, in the other valley George Dornblaser, Abraham Transue, Philip Transue, Peter Wagner, George Hilgert, George Bowman, Michael Nauman and John Setzer. All were farmers, and selected localities favorable for cultivation. On account of the abundance of game and fish, there was no difficulty in supplying the table with meat. Stroudsburg was the nearest point at which they could procure the necessaries of life which they did not possess.

Henry Everhart and George Kleckler settled in Paradise township about 1820. They did not remain many years in the township, but moved away with their entire families. Augustus Biesecker now owns and occupies the land on which George Kleckler settled. The tract on which Henry Everhart settled is owned by William T. Snodgrass.

Nicholas Bush settled in this township in 1821. He was the father of nine children, viz.: Sarah, Jacob, Henry, Joseph, Frederick, Mary, Christine, Elizabeth and Susan. Sarah was the wife of Benjamin Bush, and resided in Price township at the time of her death. Jacob resided in New York until his decease. Henry married Elizabeth Heller, and lived in the township. He had four children, viz.: Charles, George, Katie and Frank. Charles is married to Elmira Metzgar, and lives in the township. George married Margaret Pipher, and lives on the homestead. Katie is the wife of Jerome Jones, and resides in the township. Frank married Phœbe Pipher, and lives in the township. Joseph married Catharine Smith, and resided in the township at his decease. He was the father of eight children, viz.: Jacob, Joseph, Elizabeth, Christine, Hannah, Lydia, Catharine and Mary. Jacob married Mary A. Woodling, and resides in the township. He has three children, John A., Annie and Alvin. Joseph married Mary Heller, and has three children, Frank, William and John. Hanna was the wife of Charles Anglemeyer, and resided in Stroud township. Lydia is the wife of Jacob Warner and lives in the township. Catharine is the wife of William Bowman. Mary is the wife of James Buskirk, and lives in Lackawanna County.

George Dornblaser moved from Hamilton and settled in Paradise Valley in 1822. He had seven children, viz.: Peter P., Hannah, Elizabeth, Daniel, John, Joseph and Michael. Peter P. resides in the township and retains part of his father's land. He married Sarah A. Warner, and at her decease, Mary A. Siglin. He is the father of twelve children, viz.: Priscilla, Sarah A., George E, Emily E., Etna, Rebecca, James D., Benjamin F., Catharine, Caroline, Isaac S., John H. John married Hester Smith, and lives on the homestead. He has three children, Ianthe, Charles and Emma. Ianthe is the wife of Johnson Clark and lives in the township. Charles resides in Wisconsin. Lucy is the wife of George Bird and lives in Michigan. Benjamin is dead. Philip Transue came from Easton and settled in Paradise township, where he lived the rest of his life.

Hannah is married to a Mr. Houseman, and lives in New Jersey. Elizabeth died unmarried. Albright lives in California. Hester is the wife of Leopold Becker, and lives in the West.

All the old settlers took possession of the land without deeds. George Dornblaser, George Bowman, Abraham Transue, Philip Transue, Peter Wagner and George Hilgert settled on a tract of land called the "James Morris tract." The land was conveyed by Morris to one Mussie, by Mussie to John Boys and by Boys to the several settlers.

Robert Westcott obtained a patent for the land on which John Learn settled. This land was transferred by Robert Westcott to Charles Coxe. Charles Coxe conveyed it to John Learn, who conveyed it to Jacob Learn, the present owner.

ROADS.—The first road constructed in what is now Paradise township was laid out in 1825 and was called the State road. It ran in an easterly direction through the centre of the township and connected Stroudsburg with Stanhope. Previous to the erection of Paradise township two other roads were constructed. The one extends from Stanhope (now Swiftwater) to Henryville, the other from Paradise Valley to Price township. These roads were in a very bad condition, and in many places there were no bridges over the streams. Since Paradise was made a separate township, under the direction of competent supervisers more roads have been built, the old ones repaired and all been kept in an excellent condition. The following is a list of the supervisors who have been elected from the erection of the township to the present day:

Schools.—Previous to 1834 there were no organized schools in the township. The children were either taught at home or at the residence of some neighbor. Shortly after this period two school-houses were built, the one frame and the other of logs. The frame school-house was built at the forks of a road a short distance from Henryville. The building still stands, but is not used for school purposes. The log building was constructed near the residence of Peter P. Dornblaser but was torn down long since. In place of these buildings there are now four well-constructed school-houses, all of which have been built within the past ten years. The schools are in a flourishing condition and are taught by competent teachers. In the selection of sites for buildings, attention was paid to choosing positions easy of access for the majority of scholars. School No. 1 is located at Paradise Valley, and has on its roll the names of forty-five pupils. School No. 2 is situated about two miles west of School No. 1, and numbers forty-five scholars. School No. 3 is located at Henryville and numbers forty-six pupils. School No. 4 is situated in the northern part of the township, and numbers forty-one pupils. HOTELS AND BOARDING-HOUSES.—For the past ten years there has been no licensed hotel in the township. The first tavern was built at Paradise Valley, in 1838, by George Bowman. Since that time it has been owned, successively, by David Edinger, Henry Kintz, Thomas Lockyer and James Kintz, the present owner and proprietor. It is located near the centre of the valley and commands a fine view. Many improvements and additions have been made to it during the past few years. It is now used exclusively as a boarding-house. Accommodations can be afforded to seventy-five guests. The township elections have always been held here.

In 1842 James Henry built a hotel at Henryville. The building, with improvements and additions, is now used as a summer boarding-house, and accommodates seventy-five guests. It is pleasantly located in a narrow valley a short distance from the railroad station. It is known as the Henryville House.

The Park House is the name of the largest boarding-house in Paradise township. It was built at Henryville, in 1880, by William E. Henry. It is pleasantly situated, at a distance of a mile from Henryville Station. A branch of Brodhead Creek flows a few feet from the house. The entire building is supplied with water and all modern appliances. A billiard-room is attached, for the amusement of the guests. The grounds are nicely arranged for the practicing of all kinds of games and sports. Mrs. William E. Henry is the present owner. The house affords ample room for the accommodation of one hundred and twenty-five guests.

Chase & Cattell are the proprietors of the Wiscasset House, situated a short distance from Forks Station. The site for the house was well chosen and affords a good view. The house is newly built and supplied with the latest appliances. Excellent accommodations can be afforded for seventy-five persons STORES AND MILLS.—The first store in Paradise township was opened at Henryville, in 1845, by James Morgan and Edward Brown. Previous to the opening of this store Stroudsburg was the nearest place at which the usual necessaries of life could be obtained. Messrs. Brown & Morgan kept a general retail store for a few years and then closed. For a year or more there was no store at Henryville, but in 1850 James Morgan and Charles Henry opened another store. Morgan shortly afterwards retired, leaving Henry sole proprietor for a short time, when he sold a half-interest to V. T. Miller. They, in turn, sold to C. E. Post, whom W. E. Henry & Co. succeeded. W. C. Henry, the present owner, is the successor of W. E. Henry & Co.

In 1849 James Kintz built and opened a store in Paradise Valley, and has since retained possession and management of it.

The next store was opened in 1881, near the present Lutheran Church. H. B. Courtright, the proprietor, has everything conveniently arranged for the conducting of business.

In 1882 C. E. Post opened another store at Henryville. He assumed the management for about a year, when it was transferred to Jackson Lantz, who shortly afterwards transferred it to Rufus Price, the present owner.

The first saw-mill in the township was built at Henryville, in 1835, by James Henry. It is located on the middle branch of Brodhead Creek. Under the direction of James Henry the mill was run for many years, but at present it is used but very little.

In 1842 another saw-mill was built on the same stream, a short distance north of James Henry's, by Charles Henry. It was next owned by W. E. Henry, who rebuilt it and put it in perfect running order. It is now owned and managed by W. C. Henry.

The first and only grist-mill in the township was erected, in 1849, by James Kintz, the present owner. It is situated on Long Swamp Creek, at Paradise Valley. The mill is a source of great convenience to the community, as otherwise Stroudsburg would be the nearest point where they could get their grain converted to flour.

Post-Offices.—The first post-office in the township was established at Paradise Valley in 1849. The office was kept in a building nearly opposite the hotel, and now used as a dwelling-house. John Edinger and David Edinger received the first commission as postmasters of this region. They were succeeded by James Kintz, the present incumbent, who, when he received the commission, removed the post-office to his store, where it is at present Two mails are received daily at this office.

In 1852 a post-office was established at Henryville, and James Henry was appointed postmaster. He was succeeded by his son, D. W. Henry, whom A. F. Kistler followed. During his time of service the post-office was moved and the name changed to Parkside. W. C. Henry, the present postmaster, was appointed the successor of A. F. Kistler in 1885. A portion of his store is set off for the distribution of the two daily mails.

Villages.—Henryville is the name of a small hamlet situated in the southeastern part of Paradise township. In 1845 it was first spoken of as a village, and named Henryville, in honor of James Henry. The land on which it is located was originally owned by David Gordon and Thomas Bush. The middle branch of Brodhead Creek bounds it on the east and south. The settlement contains a depot and freight-house of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad, two boarding-houses, two stores, a post-office, a school-house, a saw-mill and about a dozen dwellings.

Paradise Valley is the name of the oldest settlement in the township. It is located in one of the valleys near the centre, and marks the place where some of the earliest settlers erected their rude log houses. These have been removed, and, in their stead, neat new frame dwellings have been built. In this village are a store, a boarding-house, a post-office, a grist-mill, a wheelwright shop, a blacksmith shop, a school house and about twenty dwellings.

Longevity of Inhabitants.—The longevity of the people of this region is somewhat remarkable. Of the six hundred and eighty-eight inhabitants, there are, at least, twenty-five persons who have attained the age of seventy years. Five couples—viz.: Jacob Biesecker and wife, Andrew Storm and wife, Charles Hilgert and wife, John Bowman and wife and Francis Keller and wife—have lived in wedded bliss for more than half a century.

Religious Matters.—In 1825, a few years after the first settlers arrived, steps were taken for the erection of a church. Previous to this religious meetings were held in the residences of the several settlers. The work of constructing a log church was commenced under the supervision of Henry Bush. He had, as assistant carpenters, John Bush, Jacob Bush, Henry Dietrick and David Acterdy. The work was completed and the church dedicated in the fall of 1826, the services being conducted by Revs. Huffenditz and Rupert. It was the Lutheran denomination. The first members of this church were George Hilgert, Peter Wagner, Philip Transue, Abraham Transue, John Cougher, Aaron Koch, George Bowman, George Dornblaser, Jacob Hudle, John Greek, Jacob K. Koerner, George Crotzer, John Shiffer, Henry Anglemeyer, Peter Anglemeyer, John Learn, Peter Neuhart and John Arnold. The first trustees were George Bowman and George Hilgert, and the first steward was Jacob Koerner. Until 1852 this was the only church in this region, and was attended by persons from all the surrounding country. The building was used for divine services until 1856. In the rear of the church is a cemetery, now protected by a stone wall, in which all of the old settlers are buried.

In 1838 the first Evangelical meeting was held in Paradise township. So favorable an impression was made by the doctrines of this denomination that regular meetings have been held ever since. The following ministers have officiated from 1838 to 1852, the year the church was dedicated: Revs. Hoffman, Henneberger, Barrier, Haines, Mace, Cramer, Hesser, Mintz, Bast, Shultz, Luthro, Jacoby, Farnsworth, Gross, Sindlinger, Hess, Wieand, Bucks, Young, Sigafus, Krecker and Ely. In 1851 it was decided to erect a church. Land was donated to them for this purpose by George Dornblaser. The building was completed in 1852. It is a neat, one-story building, thirty-four by twenty-four, and cost about four hundred dollars. The dedication sermon was preached by Revs. Frederick Krecker and Ephraim Ely. The first trustees were P. P. Dornblaser, Joseph Boorem and Christian Nauman. Abraham Transue was the first class-leader, and Peter P. Dornblaser the first exhorter. There are at present about forty members of this church. A flourishing Sunday-school is connected with the church. A burying-ground is attached to the church.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in this township was erected in the fall of 1851 and the summer of 1852. The building committee was composed of Oliver D. Smith, John Storm and James Wilson. The building is a neat, frame structure, one story high, thirty-five feet in length and twenty-five feet in breadth. The cost of the building was about four hundred dollars. The land on which the building stands was donated by Oliver D. Smith. Rev. Siesta preached the dedication sermon. The following ministers have officiated since its erection: Revs. Siesta, Watson, Wood Hinson, Egan, McGhee, Shafer, Townsend, Sebring, Pastorfield, Cragg, Marten, Shields, Hobbs, Dungan and Illick. The membership at present is forty-four.

The Reformed Church, often called Jones' Church, was erected in 1856. Henry Heller and John Rhodes were the building committee. The building is a frame structure, one story high, fifty feet in length and thirty-five in breadth. The cost of the building was eight hundred dollars. Revs. Decker, Heilig, Siegle, Mitchler and Smith have officiated since its erection. At present there is no regular pastor. The membership is about thirty-five.

GEORGE WAGNER.—One of the early settlers in Paradise township, Monroe County, Pa., was Joseph Wagner, who was born in Austria about the year 1802. He was well educated in German and eventually learned the trade of a goldsmith and became an expert workman. He, like most of the mechanics of that day, became a great traveler and went from place to place seeking work and in different countries. About the year 1820 he left his native land and came to Philadelphia, where he did whatever work he could get to do for six years. He then went to Bucks County, where he remained until 1826, when he came to Monroe County and located on four hundred acres of wild land in Paradise, part of which is now owned by his son George. The township was then an almost unbroken wilderness and the home of bears, wolves, deer and other wild game. He was the possessor of unbounded pluck and energy but of no money. He "squatted" on his land, expecting that twenty-one years' possession would give him a good title from the government. He made staves, which he hauled eighteen miles with a yoke of oxen and sold for ninety cents per hundred to Mr. Zimmerman, and in that way made his living. He married, in 1826, Barbara, daughter of Martin Slyker, who, with his wife, emigrated from Germany. To Mr. and Mrs. Wagner were born children as follows: George, Joseph (who enlisted in the Union army and died from wounds received in battle), Rosina, Mary, Edward, Simon (died in childhood), Simon, Catherine, David, (who enlisted in the Ninetieth Pennsylvania Regiment of Infantry and served until he lost his leg, after which he served in the government departments until his death, in October, 1880), James (who also enlisted in the Ninetieth Regiment and served all through the war and was in many hard-fought battles, he died a few years after the war ended). Joseph, the father, died in 1842; his wife, March 24, 1864. George Wagner, of whom this sketch is written, was born in Paradise, on the farm now owned by him, January 18, 1828. He was but fourteen years old when his father died, and he being the eldest of the family, became its mainstay and support. To him and his mother the future looked dark indeed, as they had scarcely any means and nine children younger than George. But the boy George, with the help of his brother, kept the family from want, and in the struggles and hardships of those days laid the foundation for the earnest, honorable manhood he has ever shown.

In 1844 he built (on seven acres of land which was given them by Stroud Hollinshead from the farm they could not pay for) a small log house, which was their home for many years. Joseph remained at home a few years, then married and sought out a home in the West for himself, while George remained with his mother. During the first two years he worked at whatever he could do, and earned twenty-five cents per day. In 1844, work being hard to find even at those low figures, he went on the Lehigh and worked in the lumber woods for six dollars and fifty cents per month, and did not get all his pay for two years. His clothing the first winter was made of cotton jean, and low shoes on his feet, with the snow eighteen inches deep! The next summer he got a job getting rafts of lumber out of the river, and received therefor one dollar and a half for a raft of ten thousand feet of lumber. While at work he would be wet from his breast down, and could earn by working evenings only one dollar per day clear of expenses. For seven years he cut logs in the winter for a shilling a log and took out rafts in the summer.

In 1851 and '52 he took a job of David Taylor, getting out logs at two dollars and fifty cents per thousand, and in this way got his start in life. In 1854 he bought of Stroud Hollinshead the four hundred and sixteen acres his father lived on, for which he was to pay two dollars and fifty cents per acre, and paid five hundred dollars down. He built a house, barn and other out-buildings, and has cleared a hundred acres. He has grown a fine orchard, which yields, some years, a thousand bushels of apples. His farm claimed his attention in summers, while he lumbered twelve winters in succession for Isaac Case, of Tobyhanna Mills, Pa.; also one winter for Judge Paxson, of Philadelphia. In 1877 he rented his farm and entered into contract with A. F. Peters & Son to cut off the timber from seventeen hundred acres on the Newhart tract, in Tobyhanna township. He moved his family on the tract, where they have since remained, and expect to remain two years longer, then return to the farm in Paradise township to pass the remainder of their days. He has also had a job getting out for Messrs. Peters & Son ten million feet of logs near Gouldsboro'. In all his business transactions Mr. Wagner has so dealt that his word is as good as his bond, and he can say that he has never sued or been sued, nor had any dealings with the sheriff. His friends and acquaintances speak of him only in terms of praise, and in this he is an evidence that honesty and integrity, coupled with industry, are the sure stepping-stones to success. He is a Democrat, but not a politician, and has held only minor township offices. May 3, 1857, he married Miss Maria Wilson, who was born in New York September 11, 1835. She was daughter of James and Isabell Wilson. Her father came from England, her mother from Scotland. He was a blacksmith by trade, but bought of Stroud Hollinshead a piece of wild land adjoining the farm of Mr. Wagner, which he cleared and improved. To Mr. and Mrs. Wagner have been born children, as follows: Elizabeth, John J., William H., Amanda J., Martha J., George E., Isaac (deceased) and Wilson Amzy.

CHAPTER XXII.[1]

BARRETT TOWNSHIP.

BARRETT TOWNSHIP was erected in 1859, from portions of Price and Paradise townships. It was so named in honor of George R. Barrett, president judge of the Monroe County courts at that time. It is bounded on the north by Coolbaugh township and Pike County, on the east by Pike County, on the south by Price township and on the west by Paradise and Coolbaugh townships. Its greatest length, east and west, is about thirteen miles, and its greatest width is about eight miles. Formerly the entire township was heavily wooded and presented a very inviting appearance to the lumbermen. At the present time about one-half of the township is in a state of cultivation. The soil is rich and loamy. The surface is broken by numerous small hills and valleys, through which many rapid mountain-streams, abounding with trout, flow with eager haste to join the brimming river. Buckhill, Spruce Cabin and Leve's Branch Falls are on streams of the same name. These cascades, having a fall of a hundred feet or more, are much visited during the summer.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passes through the southern part of the township. By means of this railroad the products of the township are easily transferred to various markets and travel is greatly facilitated.

The scenery is very attractive and romantic, and, with the changes of the seasons, presents many varied appearances.

The population, as given by the census of 1880, is one thousand one hundred and forty-nine.

John Price, whose descendants are mentioned in the history of Price township, was the first settler in the township. He came from Bucks County and built his residence in what is now Barrett township. A few years after his arrival, in 1764, he planted an apple orchard, many trees of which are still standing, one of them having a circumference of fifteen feet and two inches. This land is now owned by Harry Peters and Harry Kellam.

The State road extending from Stroudsburg to the New Foundland settlement, passes through the centre of the township. The Wismer road started from the State road, near the residence of Charles J. Price, and extended also to New Foundland settlement. The exact dates of the construction of these roads cannot be obtained. SCHOOLS.—The first school building in this township was erected in 1845, on a tract of land now owned by Jacob Gravel. It was a select school, over which Anthony Ramer presided. It was several years after this when the public schools were first opened. At the present time there are six convenient and commodious schoolhouses in Barrett township. Four male and two female teachers instruct in these buildings two hundred and fifty pupils. Five months' school is held each year, and for instruction in this time seven hundred and fifty-five dollars are expended. The amount of tax levied for school purposes is seven hundred and fifty-two dollars. The State appropriation for this township is two hundred and twelve dollars and seventy-nine cents. HOTELS AND BOARDING-HOUSES.—In Barrett township there are at present two hotels and five boarding-houses. Allan Price is proprietor of one, and the other, which is situated at Cresco, is conducted by Henry Zeiger. Three of the boarding-houses are located at Canadensis. They are managed respectively by C. W. Bruton, Abraham Albert and David Crane. The other boarding-houses are conducted by Edward and Henry Price. The buildings are all well constructed and stand in good, healthful locations. Many private families also accommodate summer guests. The proprietors are amiable and accommodating men, and leave nothing undone to add to the happiness of their guests. The excellent fishing, the beautiful scenery and the healthiness of the place exert a great influence in bringing city people from their homes to enjoy a summer's pleasure and recreation.

Henry Zeiger can accommodate about forty people. The Laurel Grove House, conducted by C. W. Bruton, has ample room for thirty-five; Abraham Albert for thirty-five, David Crane for thirty, Edward Price for forty and Henry Price for forty.

POST-OFFICES.—The first post-office in the township was established at Coveville about 1846. Simon N. Stright was the first postmaster. He was succeeded by E. F. Palen and the office changed to Canadensis. E. F. Palen was succeeded by Henry Pye, C. W. Bruton and Wilkinson Price, the present incumbent A post-office was established at White's tannery in 1856 with William S. White as first postmaster. He was succeeded by George G. Shafer, Jerome Frantz and C. W. Decker, the present incumbent. In 1870 the name of the office was changed to Mountain Home. The post-office at Cresco was established a few years ago. J. S. Coleman was appointed postmaster. He still retains the office.

VILLAGES.—Canadensis is a small hamlet situated near the centre of the township. It contains two churches, a tannery, a grist-mill, a saw-mill, a post-office, three boarding-houses, two stores, run respectively by Abraham Albert and Henry Pye, and about thirty residences. It was formerly a more active place than at present.

Mountain Home is the name of a small village formerly called Oak Valley. It is situated in the southern part of the township, about a mile from the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad The town was in a flourishing condition until the tannery of Day, Wilcox & Co. was burned. Since that time it has slowly declined. It contains a clothes-pin factory, a veneering factory, a saw-mill, a church, a school-house, a post-office, a store run by C. W. Decker and about forty dwellings.

Cresco is the name of the only station of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad in the township. It was formerly called Oakland. It is located in the southern part of Barrett township. It contains a store, run by Place Brothers; a hotel and boarding-house, managed by Henry Zeiger, and about twenty residences.

MOUNTAIN HOME LODGE, No. 684, I. O. O. F., was instituted December 23, 1869, by Theodore Schoch, D. D. G. M. The lodge is located in the village of Mountain Home, Barrett township. The charter members were E H. Heller, Townsend Price, John A. Dunning, Jerome Frantz, Ely Utt, J. Wilson Utt, Madison Smith, Edmund Price, Robert Eaton, Moses C. Cosler and Allen Price. The present officers are, N. G., G. Sommers; V. G., H. Bachmeer; Sec, O. E. Shaller; Ass't Sec., J. Boorem; Treas., E. M. Case; Rep, E. Utt.

MANUFACTURING.—There are at present in this township a clothes-pin factory, a veneering factory, two grist-mills and six saw-mills. There were formerly two tanneries, one at Mountain Home and the other at Canadensis. Palen & Northrop built the tannery at Canadensis in 1847, and conducted it till 1875, when the scarcity of bark rendered it unprofitable. White & Brakely built the other tannery, at Mountain Home, in 1856. In 1862 Loring Andrews purchased it, and in 1874 sold it to Day, Wilcox & Co. The latter firm run it till 1885, when it was burned.

E. Dunbar & Co. built a shoe-peg factory at Mountain Home in 1868. It was sold to C. W. Decker, who changed it to a clothes-pin factory in 1880. The mill contains three sets of machines and employs twenty-five persons when in operation. At present it is owned by Richard S. Staples, Thomas A. Bell and George E. Stauffer, and is not operated.

The veneering factory was built in 1881 by C. W. Decker. It is now owned by John Sperry and is not operated.

John Pitt built one of the grist mills in 1845. It was successively owned by Henry Feltham, Emory Ergood, A. Moon and Solomon Edwards. The grist mill at Canadensis was built in 1881 by Christian Cuff. It is now owned by P. Ackerman and managed by Labar & Harris.

The saw-mills are situated in various parts of the township. They were built at early dates, and at different times have been repaired and rebuilt. The mills are about of the same size and capacity, employing from three to eight men. They are at present owned by Martin B. Rinehart, George Price & Sons, P. Ackerman, Eleazer Price & Co., Milton and Wesley Price and Howard and Joseph Price. Labar & Harris conduct P. Ackermen's mill, which is situated at Canadensis. The others are both owners and proprietors.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.

METHODISM IN BARRETT TOWNSHIP.[1]—Regular Methodist preaching began to be held in this township in the year 1855, at which time Paradise Circuit was organized and left to be supplied by the presiding elder, who appointed Rev. Francis D. Eagan pastor in charge. His preaching-points within the limits of the township were the old school-house in the cove, near Canadensis, and the house of Harrison Sebring, at Oakland, now called Mountain Home.

Mr. Sebring was at that time engaged with Mr. William White in the lumbering business, which, in the hands of Shafer & Rinehart, who succeeded them in 1856, developed extensively, and was one of the agencies which induced a greater population to this section of the country. The tanning business, which commenced about this time, proved a still greater attraction for population. Little villages rapidly grew up around the tanneries of White & Brakely, at Mountain Home, and Northrop & Palen, at Canadensis. A fine field was thus opening for Christian enterprise, having, moreover, this advantage: that some of the leading men engaged in these business ventures were decided Christians, while others were favorably disposed towards the church. Rev. F. D. Eagan was reappointed to Paradise Circuit in 1856. About this time Mrs. Sarah Northrop started a Sabbath-school in the little school-house near the bridge over Goose Pond River, in Canadensis. Not much was accomplished that year, and Rev. Eagan closed his labors without seeing any material advance in church matters.

In the spring of 1857 Rev. Thomas S. Childs was appointed to the circuit, and, under God, Mr. Childs proved to be the right man for the place. He entered heartily into the work assigned him, preaching earnestly and faithfully, and personally urging the Gospel upon the attention of the people. In his labors he had the sympathy and co-operation of the scanty membership. During the latter part of that year the society, finding the old school-house in the cove no longer endurable, because of its dilapidated condition, fitted up the wagon-house in the rear of the store, in Canadensis, with seats, etc., and held service in it till the erection of the present church. In this wagon-house an extensive revival of religion took place, resulting in many conversions. This revival gave wonderful impetus to church affairs. The project of building a church was agitated, but all were not agreed as to the character it should bear, some proposing that it should be a Union Church, while others insisted that it should be distinctively Methodist. Finally a meeting was held, at which these matters were fully discussed, and the conclusion reached to build a Methodist Church on the site now occupied in Canadensis. The firm of Palen & Northrop took the responsibility of building the church. Under their supervision the present neat structure was built in 1858, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars, which was partly provided for by subscriptions, and the remainder was assumed by the above firm. The church building is a one-story frame, twenty-six by thirty-eight feet, Gothic in style, and will seat about two hundred persons. Regular preaching services are held in the church every two weeks, and are well attended. It has a membership of fifty-six, and a Sabbath-school numbering about seventy teachers and scholars.

During the fall of 1858, under Mr. Childs' pastorate, a protracted meeting was held in the school-house at Mountain Home, at which about thirty persons were converted, nearly all of whom afterwards became substantial and useful members of the society there. The people then began to feel the need of a comfortable and convenient house of worship. Accordingly, in the year 1859, under the administration of Rev. J. M. Hinson, measures were taken to secure this object, and about seven hundred dollars were obtained in subscriptions. A building lot was donated by Loring Andrews and Shafer & Rinehart.

The building of the church was entrusted to Mr. Amos R. Miller, and in a few months the people rejoiced in the possession of a neat and cheerful house of worship, capable of seating over two hundred people. The dedicatory services were conducted by Rev. Pennel Coombs, presiding elder, on which occasion three hundred dollars were raised, leaving a small amount still due, which was soon met by the society. The entire cost of the church was ten hundred and fifty dollars. The building is a one-story frame, thirty by forty feet, and has a grave-yard adjoining. Owing to removals and deaths, the present membership is small, being about thirty, but it has a flourishing Sabbath-school of over a hundred teachers and scholars. Mr. George G. Shafer is the efficient superintendent of the school, and has held that position for more than twenty years. During the present pastorate the churches at Canadensis and Mountain Home, which now form part of the Spragueville Circuit, have both been repaired and renovated at a cost of five hundred dollars. Methodism has done much toward elevating the minds and forming the morals of the people in this region.

THE MORAVIAN CHURCH.—Previous to 1859 the Moravians held their services in the residence of John Deubler. In 1858 the need of a church was keenly felt and a building committee was appointed to select a site and erect a house of worship. The committee was composed of Adam Albert, J. M. Deubler, Christopher Sommers, George Bender, Charles Boyer and Jacob Rinehart. In 1859 they completed a neat frame building, a story and a half high, and thirty by thirty-six feet. These men also served as trustees for a number of years. The cost of the building was twelve hundred dollars. Regular meetings are held every three weeks. The following ministers have officiated since its erection: Revs. Prager, Nagle, Oehler, Hoch, Neu, Rommel and Monch. The present membership is about thirty.

CHAPTER XXIII.

COOLBAUGH, TOBYHANNA AND TUNKHANNOCK.[1]

THE townships of Coolbaugh, Tobyhanna and Tunkhannock comprise the entire northwestern portion of Monroe County. This tract of land is bounded on the north by Lackawanna County, on the east by Wayne and Pike Counties, on the south by the townships of Barrett, Paradise, Pocono, Jackson and Chestnuthill, and on the west by Carbon County. The greatest length, northeast and southwest, is about twenty-one miles, and the greatest width about fourteen miles. This entire region was formerly comprehended under the name of Coolbaugh, so named in honor of Hon. John Coolbaugh. A portion including what is now Tobyhanna and Tunkhannock townships was separated from Coolbaugh in 1830, under the name Tobyhanna, an old Indian name for the principal stream within its boundaries. This tract was again divided in 1856 and Tunkhannock township erected from one part of it. The general structure of this region is diversified with numerous hills. Several of these, assuming quite large proportions, are known as mountains,—Pocono Mountains, Pohopoco Mountains, Pimple Hill and Locust Ridge. Near the centre of Tunkhannock township the Tunkhannock Creek widens and forms Long Pond, a sheet of water about three miles in length and one-fourth of a mile in width. Everywhere throughout this region nature has formed many pleasant and picturesque scenes. Numerous small but rapid streams rise and flow through portions of this district, thus affording an easy method of conveying logs and timber to places of manufacture and to market. The principal streams are the Tobyhanna and Tunkhannock Creeks, which, after uniting, form a branch of the Lehigh River. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passes in a northwesterly direction through the centre of Coolbaugh township and affords an easy transportation of lumber and other productions. The means of traveling are also greatly facilitated by this railroad.

This entire region was a short time since very heavily wooded with valuable timber, which was the greatest inducement for its settlement. Numerous saw-mills were quickly erected and their productions conveyed by rafts to Easton and other markets A vast quantity of timber is cut here every year. About one-tenth of this district is in a state of cultivation. The soil is of a rich, loamy nature, well watered, and yields the usual fruits, grains and vegetables and other products common to this latitude in sufficient quantities to satisfy all wants. The northern part of this territory is wet and marshy, and was formerly called the "Shades of Death," from the fact that many of the Wyoming fugitives became entangled in its marshes and died there. The population as given by the census of 1880 is one thousand two hundred and twenty-three for Coolbaugh, eight hundred and thirty-eight for Tobyhanna and two hundred and ninety-two for Tunkhannock.

EARLY SETTLERS.—The exact dates of the first settlements in these regions cannot be obtained. As nearly as can be ascertained, the first permanent settlers in Tobyhanna township were Leonard Stoddart, George Sox, William Hessler, Ezra Hays, Andrew Eschenbach, Jacob Blakeslee, Ira Winters and Robert Newell. In Tunkhannock the first permanent settlers were Peter Merwine and George Altemose. In Coolbaugh the first settlers were John P. Woodling, John Pope, Joseph Wilton, John Gearhart, Jasper Vliet, William Madden, Daniel Callahan, Jeremiah Galvin, Oliver D. Smith and Samuel Warner. The excellent growth of timber attracted many of these to this region. They subsisted by tilling the soil, shaving staves and shingles, which were readily bought by merchants traveling through this region, and by hunting and fishing. Game and fish were in abundance, and an hour spent at either of these sports would provide meat for several days. The first habitations were chiefly log houses, nearly all of which have been superseded by neat frame dwellings. Luxuries were unknown to them, and the possession of the necessaries of life afforded health and happiness.

The date of the arrival of the early settlers, the names of their descendants and the present owners of the land on which they settled, are of considerable interest and importance and will now be mentioned.

Leonard Stoddart came originally from England and settled in Tobyhanna township, near Stoddartsville, in 1800. He there built a hotel, which he conducted himself. He was the father of seven children, viz ,—Ann, Henry, Lydia, John, Maria, Sarah and Mary. Henry remained on the homestead during his life. He married Mary Dietrick, and was the father of William and Leonard. William resides at Wilkes-Barre. Leonard is the present owner of the homestead.

George Sox came from New Jersey, and settled in the township about the year 1800. He also built a hotel about that time. Shortly afterwards the settlement was named Soxville, in honor of him. He was the father of eleven children, viz ,—Jacob, John, George, Albert, Jane, Washington, Mary Franklin, Perry, Maria and Sarah A. Jacob lived in the township until his death. He married Sarah Bond and had six children,—Washington, Perry, Albert and three daughters. Washington lives in Wilkes-Barre. Perry married Jane Bowen and lives in the township. Albert, deceased.

William Hessler settled in Tobyhanna township, about 1800, on a tract now owned by Alexander McKean. None of his descendants are at present residents of the township.

Ezra Hays came from Ohio, and, in 1800, settled in Tobyhanna township. He married Christine Bond and was the father of ten children, viz.,--John, Sarah, Burton, Hannah, Eliza, Ann, Matilda, Lavina, Samuel and Lydia. Of these, Burton married Sarah A. Winters and resided in the township until his death. He was the father of fifteen children, viz.,--Amelia, Nelson, John, Warren, Chester, Elwood, Jeremiah, Hattie, McClellan, Lizzie, Clara, Charles, Laura, Martha and Leonora. The land on which Ezra Hays settled is now owned and occupied by Jacob Searfass.

Andrew Eschenbach came from Carbon County, and settled in the township in 1809. He had ten children, viz.,—Andrew, David, John, Nathaniel, Thomas, Andrew, Hannah, Joseph, Samuel G. and Benjamin. The first, Andrew, was accidentally killed while yet a young man. Jacob was killed at the battle of Antietam. Benjamin now resides at Tobyhanna Mills, Pa. Nathaniel married Ellen Scott and resided in the township. He was the father of ten children, viz.,--John W., Albert, Sarah, Lydia, James, Mary, George, Eliza, Thomas and Elizabeth. Andrew married Lydia Bond and resides in the township. Hannah, the wife of A. Berry, resided in the township until her death. Samuel G. married Asenith Lefler and resided on the homestead. He is the father of eleven children, viz.,—Mary. Annie. Harriet, John S.. Sarah, Susan, Charles, Arabella, Isabella, Joseph E. and Martha.

Jacob Blakeslee married Rachel White, and moved to Tobyhanna township in 1812. They were the parents of three children,—William, Jacob and John. Of these, Jacob married Clara Winters and resides on the homestead. He is the father of eleven children, viz.,—Franklin P., Austin, Malvin, Howard, Emelia, Harriet, Stewart, M. Cora, Rachel, Albert D. and Minnie.

Ira Winters came from Connecticut and settled in 1812 on a tract of land in Tobyhanna township, now the property of Samuel Hays. He was a resident of the township until his death. He had eight children, viz.: John, Clara, Washington, Robert, Jude A., Sarah, Ira and Burton. John married Elizabeth Sanders and lived in the township during his life He had ten children, viz.: Clara, Sarah A., Henry, Catharine, Robert, Thomas, Elizabeth, Hiram, Charles and Elmira Sarah married John Biesecker and resided in the township until her death. Ira married Eliza Hays and resides in the township. He is the father of nine children, viz.: Burton, Phœbe, Maria, Matilda, Emma J., Samuel, Ann, Amanda and Walter.

Robert Newell settled in 1812 in Tobyhanna township, on a tract of land now owned by Alexander McKean. He came from New Jersey. After residing here a number of years he moved to Wisconsin with his entire family, except James, who now resides in Chestnuthill township.

In Tunkhannock township the majority of early settlers remained but a short time and then removed to other parts. There are, however, two families who entered at an early date, whose descendants still reside there.

Peter Merwine married Susanna Denton and in 1804 moved from Chestnuthill township and settled in what is now Tunkhannock township. He continued to live in this township until his death. He was the father of ten children, viz.: John, Jacob, Denton, Fannie, Amanda, George W., Peter, Mary A., Sarah and William. Of these, George W. married Sarah A. Warner and resides in the township. He is the father of seven children, viz.: Delilah, Josiah, Wilson, Luther, Edwin, Marshall and Emma. Peter married Elizabeth Colt and resided on the homestead. He is the father of three children,—Irvin J., Vincent O. and Alvin.

George Altemose came from Chestnuthill township and settled in Tunkhannock township in 1830. He continued a resident of the township until his death. He was the father of fourteen children, viz.: Jacob E., William, Henry, George, Julia A., Daniel, Perry, Carl, Charles, Sarah A., Irvin, Stewart, Thomas and Emory. Of these, Jacob E. married Julia A. Bowser and resides in the township and has eleven children. Thomas married Maria Knecht and lives in the township. He has six children.

Although Coolbaugh is the oldest of these three townships, its first permanent settlements occurred at a period later than the other two. Among the first who came to this township was John P. Woodling, who settled here in 1829. He came from New York City accompanied by his wife, whose maiden-name was Jane Chambers. He continued a resident of this township until his death. He was the father of eight children, viz.: Henrietta, Emiline, Ann, Sarah, William, Henry, James and Josiah Ann married James Welsh, and Sarah, Edward Black. Both reside in the township. William lives in Jackson township. Henry resides in Barrett township. Josiah married Emiline Ergood and lives on the homestead. He is the father of four children.

John Pope and wife came from New York City and settled in the township in 1829. They remained residents of the township until their deaths. The land on which they settled is now owned by Jonathan Coffman.

Joseph Wilton came to the township in 1829 from New York City. He married Matilda Vliet and still resides here. He is the father of six children, viz.: John J , Mary E., Joseph, Melissa, Henry S. and George G.

John Gearhart camè from Jackson township and settled in Coolbaugh about the year 1830. He was a resident of the township at the time of his death. He had eight children, viz.: Rebecca, Philip, Christine, Mary, Emiline, Jacob, William and Jane. Philip and Jacob reside in Wayne County. Mary, wife of Lambert Fry, lives in Wayne County. William married Margaret Stiff and resides on the homestead. He has had seven children. Jane, wife of William Nye, resides in the township.

Jasper Vliet settled in the township about 1830. He spent the remainder of his life in this region. He was married to Sarah Burritt and had seven children, viz.: Rebecca, Abraham, David, Matilda, John, Gideon and Jasper. Abraham, John and Jasper are dead. John Wolf now owns the land on which the elder Jasper Vliet settled.

William Madden came from New York City and settled in this township in 1831. He married Margaret Ohern and resided in the township until his death. He was the father of ten children, viz.: John (of Reading), Timothy (of Wisconsin), Thomas (of Wayne County), William, Catharine, Mary, Margaret, Anna, Ellen and Lizzie.

Daniel Callahan came from New York City and settled in the township in 1832. His wife's maiden-name was Margaret Welsh. They resided in the township until their deaths. They had six children, viz.: John, Margaret, Ellen, Jeremiah, Ann, Daniel. Of these, John resides in Wayne County and Daniel in the township.

Jeremiah Galvin came from New York City in 1834 and resided in this township during the rest of his life. He was the father of four children, viz.: Margaret, Catharine, Patrick and Dennis. Of these, Patrick, unmarried, resides in the township. The homestead is now owned by Francis Stine.

Oliver D. Smith moved from Stroud township into Coolbaugh in 1835. He was married to Ellen Trieble and resided in the township during the remainder of his life. He had five children, viz.: Lewis, Frank, Martin L., George T. and Effie. Lewis married Carrie Lasher and resides in the township. Frank lives in Paradise township. Martin L. resides in East Stroudsburg, Pa. George T. married Ellie Heller and resides in the township; and Effie, wife of Emanuel Detrick, lives in Stroud township.

Samuel Warren came from Hartford, Conn., and settled in Coolbaugh township in 1836. He was married to Frances Shurley and had eleven children, viz.: Mary A., Hiram, Emiline, Hannah, William, John, Alford, Ann M., Samuel and Jerome. Of these, Hiram married Lavina Letherman, and resides on the homestead. He is the father of seven children. William married Elizabeth Ace, and John, Lydia E. Compton. Both live in the township. Ann M., wife of Michael Flinn, resides in the township.

ROADS.—In early times four roads of considerable importance were constructed running through this region. The Sullivan road was cut through by soldiers under the command of General Sullivan, in 1779, in their efforts to reach Wyoming Valley before the massacre. They started from Easton and cut their path as they went. A portion of this road is still in use. The Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike was built in 1816, and is in good repair at the present.

The Drinker family originally owned a large tract of land in this vicinity. A road was cut through by this family for the purpose of opening this land. It was named Drinker turnpike, in honor of this family. The North and South turnpike (formerly called the Easton and Belmont) was a road extending from Easton to Belmont. All of these roads are now in good repair and numerous others have been built in later times.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS.—On account of the sparse population in this region, the early settlers were here many years before a church was built. In the meantime, however, divine worship was not neglected, but the inhabitants met in one another's houses and offered up their petitions to their Maker. The erection of school buildings also afforded places of worship until a more favorable time for building a church.

At present there are four neat and commodious churches in use, and one in the course of erection. There is also a Baptist Church in Coolbaugh township, which is no longer used. Two of these churches are located in Tobyhanna Mills, and two in Tobyhanna township.

The Methodist Episcopal Church located at Tobyhanna Mills was constructed in 1864 and 1865. Previous to this time meetings were held in the school-house In 1853 the first minister was sent to this charge from the Philadelphia Conference. From this time till 1865 it was a mission station, and received fifty dollars per year from the Conference. In 1864 it was decided to build a church, and I. S. Case, Charles Dill and Rev. George Greenfield were appointed a building committee. Under their supervision a neat, one-story building, twenty-eight by forty-five feet, was erected. The cost of the building was three thousand dollars. The land and about half the cost was contributed by the Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company. The dedication services were conducted by George Peck, D.D., LL.D., and S. S. Grove, the pastor in charge. The following ministers have officiated from its erection to the present time: Revs. Greenfield, Grove, Ayars, Edwards, Gillingham, Maclary, McDowell, Collom, Joseph Bickerton, Jabez Bickerton, Horwell and Kaines. The present membership numbers thirty six. A prosperous Sunday-school, numbering one hundred scholars, under the superintendence of N. S. Brittain, is connected with the church. The first trustees were Samuel Case Simon Gruver, Joseph Holland, I. S. Case and Charles Dill.

The other church, located at Tobyhanna Mills, is a Catholic Church. The building was erected about 1868. It is a neat, one-story structure, thirty by forty feet, and cost about two thousand dollars. Divine services are held once a month by Rev. Manley. The membership of this church at present numbers about thirty.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Blakeslee, Tobyhanna township, was built in 1852. Previous to this year religious meetings in this township were held in the school-houses. In 1852 the need of a church was keenly felt and a building committee was appointed. This committee erected a neat structure, forty by fifty feet, at a cost of sixteen hundred dollars. The dedication services were performed by Presiding Elder Sheppard and Frederick Illman, the pastor in charge. The first trustees were Jacob Blakeslee, Washington Winters, Jude A. Winters and William Ebaugh. The following ministers have been stationed here since: Frederick Illman, Revs. Lewis, Staples, Baldwin, Eckman, Ware, Wright, Malsberry, Woodruff, Laycock, Laush, Paddoc, Mott, Houck, Gill, Stephens and Frisby. The present membership is about seventy. A Sunday-school, in good condition, is connected with the church.

The Reformed Church at Hauser's Mills was erected and dedicated in 1884. The dedication services were conducted by Rev. D. Y. Heisler, of Easton, assisted by Rev. G. W. Kershner, of Stroudsburg, and Rev. Frank Smith, the pastor in charge. The building is a neat structure, thirty by sixty feet, one story high. The cost of the building was about two thousand two hundred dollars. At present there is no pastor stationed here. Permission, however, is granted to the Methodists to have services twice a month. The membership of this church numbers about one hundred.

Schools.—The first school house in this region was built in 1831, at what was formerly called Soxville, in Tobyhanna township. It was a small building, constructed of logs. Miss Sarah Winters presided as the first teacher. The school law passed in 1834 had the effect of hastening other school buildings. Some of these are still standing, but are no longer used for school purposes. Instead of these, new buildings have been erected in convenient locations. In this region there are now fourteen schools, containing five hundred and forty nine pupils. Six male and eight female teachers are employed to whom the sum of $1831.62 is annually paid. The average school term is five months. These schools receive a State appropriation of $438.53. The total tax for school and building purposes is $1558.02.

MANUFACTORIES.—This region is well timbered, and on this account most of its manufactories are for the conversion of logs into boards and other marketable merchandise. Various saw-mills have been erected since its settlement of which no data can be obtained. It is very probable that the first saw-mill in this district was erected by Jasper Vliet at Long Pond in 1820. This saw-mill, as well as many others in this region, has not been used for some years. The manufactories at the present time consist of five saw-mills, three clothes-pin factories, a shoe-peg factory, a planing-mill and a silk-mill.

The Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company are the owners of one of the saw-mills, a clothes pin factory, the planing-mill and silk-mill. On the site of the present saw-mill several others have stood. This one was built in 1865. It stands on a bank of the Tobyhanna Creek, within the limits of Tobyhanna Millls. The creek affords easy facilities for booming the logs. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad passing close by it affords an easy transfer of its produce to market. The capacity of the mill is twelve million feet per annum. In operating it fifty-one men are employed.

The planing-mill was built by the same firm in 1858 and rebuilt in 1862. A rail track connects this mill with the saw-mill, and the boards are easily transferred from one mill to the other. Its facilities are excellent and could be improved on in no way. Eight men are employed in its operation.

In 1881 this company built a clothes-pin and shoe-peg factory in one building. This was destroyed by fire in 1882, when the present clothes-pin factory was erected. It is situated in Tobyhanna Mills, in close proximity to the other mills. This factory is believed to be the largest clothes-pin factory in the United States, four sets of machinery being in use. It is run on full time and the average number employed is thirty-two.

For the successful management of these manufactories the Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company employ fifty-five other men in various capacities. In addition to these, many other men are employed by contractors, to whom a large amount of work is given yearly by this company. In connection with their industries here is a saw-mill at Tannery, Carbon County, with a capacity of seven million and a half feet per annum, the timber for which is principally supplied from Coolbaugh township.

A silk-mill was erected at Tobyhanna Mills in 1883 by this company. It is leased and run by the Standard Silk Company. The building is a wooden structure, forty-three by two hundred and twenty-five feet. The silk is received in original packages from Italy and Japan. At this mill it is spun and prepared for weaving, when it is shipped away. From seventy-five to one hundred persons are employed in it. Isaac Stauffer owns a saw-mill, a shoe peg factory and clothes-pin factory, all of which are located at Hauser's Mills.

The saw-mill was erected in 1851 by Charles Hauser. By him it was conveyed to Isaac Stauffer, the present owner, who has thoroughly repaired it. The mill is constantly run and affords employment to about a dozen men. The clothes-pin factory was erected by him in 1876. He has operated it on full time from its erection to the present date. Steam and water-power are used to run it. About thirty persons are engaged in operating it. The shoe-peg factory was built in 1882 by Mr. Stauffer and has been in full operation ever since. It is the only shoe peg factory in the county at the pr sent time. It is run by steam. There are about thirty persons employed in it.

Thomas Miller is the owner of a saw-mill and clothes-pin factory situated in Millerstown. These manufactories were constructed by Timothy Miller and by him conveyed to William Wallace in 1879.

In 1884 they were purchased of William Wallace by Thomas Miller, the present owner. The saw-mill was built in 1862 on the Tunkhannock Creek. The mill is well adapted and located. It is run on full time and affords employment to about a dozen men. The clothes-pin factory is situated in the same neighborhood. It was built in 1884. Mr. Miller runs the mill at its full capacity and employs about forty persons. Peter Merwine and Amos Koch are the owners of the other two saw-mills, both of which are in Tunkhannock township. They are portable steam saw-mills, and when lumber is scarce in one neighborhood they are taken to another. Peter Merwine has run his since 1868 and Amos Koch since 1885. About a dozen men are employed to run each of them.

POST-OFFICES.—The first post-office in this district was undoubtedly established at Naglesville. The date, however, cannot be obtained. In 1865 Simon Gruver was appointed postmaster, and the name of the office changed to Tobyhanna Mills. Simon Gruver was succeeded by Samuel Case, I. S. Case, Samuel Shaw and N. S. Brittain, the present incumbent. With the exception of Stroudsburg, it is the only money-order office in the county.

In 1848 a post-office was established at Forks, under the name of New Mount Pleasant. Oliver D. Smith was appointed postmaster. He was succeeded by Joseph Myers, Theodore Brodhead, Jacob B. Teel, Lewis Smith, James Wilson, D. C. Yothers and Lewis Smith, the present incumbent. In 1864 the name of the office was changed to Forks, and later on to Mount Pocono, the present name. In 1879 a post-office was established at Hauser's Mills, and Mrs. Isaac Stauffer was appointed postmistress. The office has never been changed, and is still managed by Mrs. Stauffer. Drover's Home post-office was established August 21, 1882 Josiah Dowling was appointed postmaster at that time, and still retains the position. Long Pond post-office was established July 1, 1883. Daniel Klase was the first postmaster. His successors were O. J. Kistler and John Barrall, the present incumbent. In 1884 a post-office was established at Blakeslee. In honor of Jacob Blakeslee, the first and only postmaster, it was named Blakeslee. In 1879 a post office was established at Pocono, Coolbaugh township. Reuben Newhart was appointed postmaster. He was succeeded by John McCormick, the present incumbent.

HOTELS AND BOARDING-HOUSES.—In the townships of Coolbaugh, Tobyhanna and Tunkhannock there are at present ten hotels and five boarding-houses. The hotels are conducted by the following proprietors: Josiah Dowling & Bro., at Drover's Home; James Wilson, at Forks; W. H. Everett, at Mount Pocono; H. F. Krauter, at Tobyhanna Mills; John McCormick, at Pocono; Isaac Stauffer, at Houser's Mills; Catharine Shiffer, at Blakeslee; John Elmiriger, in Tobyhanna township; S. F. Larzalere, at Long Pond; and Frank P. Meckes, in Tunkhannock township. All of these hotels are kept in an excellent manner, and good accommodations are afforded to man and beast. During the summer months many of them are filled with summer boarders in search of health and pleasure, both of which are to be obtained in this region. The boarding-houses are conducted by the following gentlemen: E. E. Hooker & Son are the owners of the largest boarding-house in this neighborhood, situated a short distance from Forks, and can afford good accommodations to one hundred guests; William Case's boarding-house is located at Tobyhanna Mills, and affords accommodations to fifty persons; David Vliet's boarding-house is at Forks, and accommodates forty guests; William Heller's boarding-house is located at Forks, and affords accommodation to forty guests; Samuel Warner's boarding-house is located at Forks, and accommodates thirty guests. The boarding-houses are newly built on fine locations and fitted up with modern appliances. Many persons are attracted here annually by the healthy location, (being two thousand feet above the sea-level), the beauty of the scenery and the good accommodations afforded them by the proprietors of the hotels and boarding-houses.

VILLAGES. - Tobyhanna Mills, the largest village in this section of the country, is pleasantly located near the centre of Coolbaugh township. The land on which it is situated was originally owned by the Drinker family, of whom the Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company purchased forty thousand acres, including the present town. By them lots were sold and buildings erected. I. S. Case superintended the general laying out of the town. The cause of the rapid growth of this village is the industries of the Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company. The first house erected within the present site of Tobyhanna Mills was a log one, erected by Jasper Vliet. The village was formerly called Naglesville, in honor of George Nagle, a man from Philadelphia, who opened the first store here, and also built a small water-power saw-mill about 1840. The village afterwards received its present name from the Indian name for the stream flowing by it. The town contains a Methodist Episcopal Church and a Catholic Church, a post-office, a depot and freight-house, three stores (run respectively by The Tobyhanna and Lehigh Lumber Company; D. G. Callahan and W. W. Brodhead), a clothes-pin factory, saw-mill, a planing-mill, a silk-mill, a graded school containing three departments, a hotel, a boarding-house and a number of minor industries. The population at the present is estimated at about eight hundred.

Forks Station is a hamlet situated in the south-eastern part of Coolbaugh township. It contains a depot and freight-house of the D. L & W. R. R., a post office, two hotels, two (stores, run respectively by C. R. Andre and F. E. Place), a bottling establishment, three boarding-houses and about twenty dwellings. The village is increasing, and is visited yearly by numbers of summer boarders.

Tompkinsville, Hauser's Mills and Millertown are three villages in Tobyhanna township, lying contiguous to one another. Within the space which they cover are a post-office, a hotel, three stores (managed respectively by Isaac Stauffer, Thomas Miller and James Werkheiser), two clothes-pin factories, two saw-mills, a shoe peg factory, a blacksmith and wheelwright shop and about fifty dwellings.

Blakeslee is the name of a small settlement on the Easton and Wilkes-Barre turnpike, in the northwestern part of Tobyhanna township. It contains a store run by Jacob Blakeslee, a post-office, a church and about fifteen dwellings. It was named in honor of Jacob Blakeslee.
